Don't Let What Happened to Cooper's Beach Happen to Main

By Dan Rattiner

As I think the entire country knows, in the year 2010, Cooper's Beach in Southampton was selected as the Most Beautiful Beach in America. The honor was bestowed by Dr. Steven Leatherman, also known as "Dr. Beach," who has for the last 21 years from his perch as Director of Florida International University's Laboratory for Coastal Research, visited thousands of beaches around the country and evaluated them scientifically in 50 different categories. These include the quality of the sand, the cleanliness of the facilities, the beauty of the surroundings, the weather, the crowds, the quality of the water and so forth and so on.

At that time, Cooper's Beach was rated #1, and East Hampton Main Beach was rated #5 by Dr. Beach, up from #6 the previous year. Many think that the classic lines of Main Beach are superior to those at Cooper's, but then, having two beaches in the top 10 of the thousands and thousands of beaches that Dr. Beach had sifted through (so to speak), was certainly something. Mayor Mark Epley and the Southampton Chamber of Commerce were very proud and made the most of the #1 designation in publicity and marketing around the country. It's believed the designation improves visitor totals by 20% or more. Indeed it is quite an honor.

Well, that was last year. A week ago, the ratings came out for 2011 and this time Main Beach in East Hampton is #4, up from #5. As for Southampton, it is nowhere. It is gone, no longer anywhere on the top 10 at all. It's an astonishing thing. Here it was in 2010 that the groundskeepers and trash removal people and the pavilion people and the beachboys and lifeguards worked and worked and worked to make Cooper's Beach #1. And after the designation, of course, they worked even harder. What could go wrong? So what the hell?

Had Dr. Beach come by earlier this summer on that terrible day when herds of endangered piping plover birds had landed on the beach and pooped everywhere and nobody was allowed to clean up the mess because of where it came from?

I remember that day and the days that followed. It was pretty awful.

But you'd think for that transgression it might have dropped to #4 or #5. But all the way off the Top Ten?

Dr. Beach spends his days—and he has said he thinks he has the best job in the world—tromping around on the various beaches everywhere making his careful ratings. He goes to all the beaches incognito so as not to be bothered when he makes his measurements and ratings. (Everybody is in bathing suits—so he shows up in a black cape and sunglasses?) It's on the up and up.

The news of the toppling of Cooper's Beach from #1 was announced on May 27 in an article in The New York Post.

South O' the Highway (and the North too)

Funnyman and "Saturday Night Live" star Seth Meyers took a working vacation at Gurney's Inn in Montauk last week. He and a group of writers reportedly worked on material for his upcoming gig as the Excellence in Sports Performance Yearly (ESPY) Awards host. Sources say whenever the group needed to refuel, they hit the Port O' Call bar.

Einstein's Birthday

Why Not Celebrate it in Sag Harbor Aug. 20?

By Dan Rattiner

We local people sometimes just get together to hang around and scheme and connive.

"Know what? Before I die, I'd like to be part of a heist."

"There's a plan."

"I'd like to be a member of a cabal."

"There's another plan."

Some years ago, a group of guys in Sag Harbor got together and decided to have a tag team relay reading of Herman Melville's Moby Dick. Melville has never been documented to have been in Sag Harbor, but he wrote about it in his book nevertheless. Sag Harbor was a big whaling town. There were half a dozen whaling towns in America.

The readings went on every spring for a day and a half at Canio's Bookstore for, I believe, five years before people just got tired of it.

Once in Sagaponack, Marty Shepard and I and a few other guys decided that the East End ought to secede from America. Get our own currency, make our own laws.

"I want to be King," I recall somebody saying.

The plan was that we'd announce secession, declare war on America and then immediately surrender, the idea being that America would then bestow mucho largesse on its beaten foe. It would have worked too, except nobody would volunteer to raise an army. We did make t-shirts though.

Yesterday, I had over to my house George Wilson, a well-known yachtsman who owns the 50-foot Aliento, built in 1968 and made of wood. It anchors off East Hampton Point all summer when Wilson is not in it. Wilson has sailed to Ireland in the Aliento. He's sailed it to Hawaii and back.

In an earlier lifetime, Wilson was the minister of the Old Whalers' Presbyterian Church in Sag Harbor and before that the Springs Presbyterian Church. Before that, he

ZAGAT RATES THE HAMPTONS

By Dan Rattiner

What restaurant serves the best food on the East End? One way to determine that is to look at the Zagat ratings. Their new 2011 edition came out two weeks ago.

There are surprises. You would think that the best restaurants would be in the chic communities of the Hamptons and Montauk. But according to Zagat, you would be wrong. Of the three best restaurants on the East End, according to Zagat, two are on the North Fork and only one is in the Hamptons. And the best of the three, standing head and shoulders above the other two, is one of the North Fork ones.

The way it works is that, during the course of a year, diners attending these restaurants write or e-mail their opinions into Zagat. They give point ratings for food, décor and service on a scale of 0-30. There may be more restaurants on the South Fork with higher ratings than on the North Fork as far as some of these other things are concerned, but in terms of the food, which is what we are writing about here, it's hands down the North Fork.

The best food can be had at the North Fork Table and Inn on the Main Road (Route 25) in Southold. The top rating for food is 30 points. North Fork scored a near perfect 29. I don't

10 MILLION PEOPLE CAN'T BE WRONG.

That's right. Ten million. Since 1974, Hampton Jitney has brought more than ten million people back and forth to the Hamptons. That adds up to more trips more times a day, more times a week, more times a year, more times than anyone in the history of the Hamptons.

You might say that makes us a legend in our own times. And for that, we'd like to say, "thanks a million" to all of you. (Make that, "thanks a ten million.")

FOURTH BEST they headlined, completely failing to note the collapse over at Cooper's.

"Long Island's Main Beach in East Hampton is the nation's fourth best, according to a new survey," the reporter wrote. "Topping the list is Sarasota Florida's Siesta Beach."

The Post described Siesta Beach, which I have never been to and hope I never have to go to, as 40 acres along a barrier island key in the Gulf of Mexico, consisting of almost pure quartz crystal sand.

"It's like sugar, and you have to bring sunglasses it's so bright," said Dr. Beach at his press conference about it. "Some people can't believe it...It's super soft and super fine. They claim to have the finest, whitest sand in the world, and I can't argue with that."

Coronado Beach in San Diego was the runner-up to Siesta Beach. Number 3 was Kahanamoku Beach in Waikiki, Honolulu, and #4 was, ahem, Main Beach in East Hampton.

But then The Post reported more about the wonderful Siesta Beach. On the west coast of Florida, it was in the crosshairs of the floating BP oil spill, though at the last minute, the oil spill went somewhere else. But still, BP crews continue to scour all the nearby beaches, including Siesta, looking for scattered tar balls. It's also true that there are condos within view of this beach, which is not good for a rating, and there is an 800-car parking lot, which usually gets full to overflowing by late morning. Apparently, the place is packed.

Dr. Beach at his press conference noted that in 2009, Siesta Beach was in the top 10, but in 2010 it was knocked off the list because, as Dr. Beach said, it was in "the line of fire," of the oil slick. But then, when it dodged that bullet, there it was again, ta da, in 2011, now #1.

"Even when the oil spill occurred, I said oil is not going to get to the Sarasota beaches and southwest Florida," Dr. Beach said, ignoring the fact that what he really did was pull Siesta from his list as the oil slick approached. "A big loop current trapped the oil 100 miles offshore. And the oil just spun and spun in the Gulf, and, in fact, right now we can hardly find any of it, even in the areas which did have oil and tar on the beaches in the Panhandle."

It's interesting to note that Dr. Beach, in addition to rating all of America's beaches every year, offers a service to each of the communities around the country that are in charge of beaches. For $800 a year, Dr. Beach will provide a monthly evaluation of a beach. What he gets in every month are "self-reported" data from the beach owners. He then replies and issues his advice on maintaining environmental quality through "proactive management." He is, after all, the expert on keeping participating beaches nice and tidy and spruced up to look their best—although their participation in this service does not, he says, get them any special treatment when it comes time for him to evaluate the top 10. He accepts no money when he rates the top 10.

As it turns out, the problem with Cooper's Beach slipping all the way off the radar has nothing to do with anything other than the rules that Dr. Beach set up when he began rating beaches 21 years ago. The rules state that when a beach wins the #1 spot, it is from that year forward no longer eligible to be considered again.

That's right. This is not a contest where every year all the beaches in the country are evaluated against one another again and again. It is not possible to be #1 in one particular year and then #1 the next year or even #10 the next year. The winning beach is simply banished! It would be as if the Yankees, winning the World Series, would then be dropped from the Major Leagues and not ever allowed to compete again.

What kind of cockamamie rule is this?

What Dr. Beach really is saying is that since this is his 21st year making this award, there are 20 beaches in America that are better than Cooper's. Cooper's is ranked #21 and Siesta #22 if you think about it. They're way down the list.

This bodes very badly for Main Beach, East Hampton. It's now #4, up from #5. Before that it was #6 and #7. East Hampton Main Beach is marching headlong into a Kiss of Death. It happened to Cooper's. It will, it seems, soon happen to Main.

I think the East Hampton Village Board should send a letter to Dr. Beach declaring that under no circumstances should they ever be rated #1. Rate them #1 and they sue. Number 2 is nice. Maybe every year #2 would be nice. Always the bridesmaid, but never the bride.

I wonder what Dr. Beach would say to that?

The Most Comprehensive Website in the Hamptons

By David Lion Rattiner

If you have been to danshamptons.com recently, then you've noticed that the website has changed dramatically for the better. I'll be the first to admit it, our old website was a little '90s. We would use the same stories all week, nothing would be new and nothing would be updated.

But after working with some of the finest web developers on the face of the earth, Dan's Papers has now moved into the 21st century, with a site that will blow your mind. Everything about our new website is state-of the-art, faster, better and easier to use, all for the benefit of our readers and fans of Dan's.

The new website offers new features, daily content and high-level technology that is on par with some of the most important websites in the United States. Above all, the purpose of danshamptons.com is to make sure that visitors to the site get the latest breaking news about the things that East End residents and people who visit the East End care about the most.

For that reason, we've expanded "South o' the Highway," one of Dan's Papers' best-read celebrity columns, into a daily, even hourly online news source. The second that Dan's Papers learns about news of a notable Hamptons figure, it will be posted instantly on our website so that you can know about it right away.

Of course, everything from Dan's Papers, every week, is up on our new website just like it was before, so you don't have to worry about not getting your much-needed dose of my Dad's stories, in case you are out of town and can't pick up the paper.

Our new website also offers the area's most complete and user-friendly events calendar, BY FAR. Want something to do in the Hamptons but don't know where to turn? Our new events calendar covers everything, and I mean

PILOTS GET 4 YEARS COMMUNITY SERVICE

By Dan Rattiner

At 7:50 p.m. on September 29, 2006, two planes collided high over the Amazon. One of them, a Boeing 737, was carrying 154 passengers, and the other was a brand-new private jet piloted by Jan Paladino of Westhampton Beach and Joseph Lepore of Bay Shore, with a crew of four.

After the collision, the Boeing airliner, owned by Gol Airlines, fell from the sky and crashed into the jungle killing all on board. Somehow, the private jet, an Embracer Legacy 600, in spite of losing part of its tail and wing, continued along, although in desperate condition, and slowly losing altitude. Those on board had no idea what had happened. The pilot later said it felt as if they had hit a pothole, but the loss of control was great enough so that they all thought they were going to die. (Joe Sharkey, a reporter from The New York Times who had hitched a ride on the plane to do a freelance story for National Geographic, wrote an account of that night, which ran in the Times two days later.)

Amazingly, a half hour later, Paladino and Lepore were able to land 125 miles from the location of the collision on the runway of a Brazilian military base. There they were initially treated as the survivors they were but the next day, when the full extent of what had happened became known, the other passengers were released, but the two pilots were asked to surrender their passports and were detained at a hotel. Two months later, after much diplomatic wrangling between the United States and Brazil, the two men were released and were able to return to Long Island in spite of protests from the Brazilian public that they be forced to remain in Brazil and stand trial as killers.

Much debate continued about the crash and what ensued. Here in America, most people felt the surviving pilots should not have been tried at all. It had been an accident. Others said the trial was being used as a distraction from the decrepit state of the Brazilian air traffic controller system. But 154 people had died.

The trial continued in Brazil, with the two pilots, now absent but testifying by studied at Princeton where on one occasion he met Albert Einstein walking along the quad.

"It was March 14," Wilson said. "That's my birthday and one day I found out it was also his. I jumped out from behind a tree. 'Happy Birthday Professor Einstein!' I crowed. He did a little dance and made a friendly wave and continued on."

Wilson has got it into his head to make a big celebration out of Einstein's Birthday this summer. Wilson would get a piece of the cake or something out of it. And of course, it would all be for Einstein in abstentia. He's not here anymore.

We discussed when Einstein WAS here. Einstein spent the summer of 1939 on eastern Long Island. He lived in a little cabin at Nassau Point on the North Fork. He had a tiny 14-foot catboat he called "Tinif," that he sailed out into Peconic Bay a few times a week. And he made friends with some of the locals he met, specifically the owner of Rothman's Department Store in Southold, David Rothman, who played the violin and had a weekly string quartet he was involved with. Einstein was 60 years old at the time and he got himself invited.

"I'm thinking we could hold the birthday party on August 20, a Saturday," Wilson told me. "I've already talked to a few people about it. Alan Rice, the scientist, says he would come. Joan Brill, who's one of the Rothmans and met Einstein when she was a little girl in Southold, said she will come. She'll bring a string quartet and they'll play a few numbers."

"Where would you hold it?" I asked.

"I'm thinking the Old Whalers' Church in Sag Harbor. It doesn't have to be there but it could be there. I'd like to make it a benefit for the basement of the church, which functions as a town community center. They have a food pantry down there. AA Meetings."

I told him I heard that a conservative synagogue is now functioning in the Old Whalers' Church on Saturday mornings upstairs along with the Presbyterians who are there on Sunday.

"I've heard that," Wilson said. "I have a soft spot in my heart for that church."

Wilson has some other ideas. At Princeton, he knew that Einstein often had, as a guest in his home, Marion Anderson, the famous black singer who had been snubbed by Constitution Hall after she had been asked to sing there. Anderson did sing, by invitation of Congress, in front of the Lincoln Memorial though.

"We'd get a black choir and sing a few of her favorite songs."

"Anything else?"

"There's a guy named Duffy Hudson who does this great 45-minute monologue called Einstein's Agony, about Einstein in 1905 when his first marriage was crumbling."

"And..."

"And our State Assemblyman and Senator respectively, Fred Thiele and Ken LaValle. They're talking about reviving Southampton College and making it into something like the Aspen Institute. Do you know Ken Auletta?"

"He plays in the Artist-Writers Softball Game I umpire every August, so I see him there. Want me to talk to him?"

We both knew why. Ken Auletta has written the best-selling book Einstein, about the great thinker, considered the best biography of this man ever.

"Yup. Maybe we can get him to read the chapter about the letter Einstein wrote to President Roosevelt from Southold that summer, urging the president to put scientists to work beating the Germans in making an Atomic Bomb."

"Maybe you can get the letter itself for the birthday party, or a facsimile of it," I said.

Three famous physicists in America at that time, worried about what the future might bring with Hitler in power and with the Germans working to construct a bomb at Penemunde, felt it was a very important letter that needed to be written and it could only reach the president if Einstein's name was on it. They came out to Southold and visited with Einstein.

"They couldn't find the house," Wilson said. "They looked for it for an hour. Finally a little kid told them where Einstein lived."

"Is it Einstein's 100th birthday?" I asked.

"No."

"And why in August instead of March? And why in Sag Harbor instead of Southold?"

"Does it matter?"

I didn't say anything for a while.

TO DEER, YOUR PLANTINGS ARE AN ALL YOU-CAN-EAT BUFFET.

Deer are lovely to look at. But not when they're feasting on your plantings. How do you handle the situation?

Call Ray Smith and Associates for a number of suggestions.

We can plant deer-resistant shrubs, trees and flowerbeds. Deer fencing is another option but not our favorite. And finally, we can provide a number of applications that will have deer looking elsewhere for a bite to eat. These repellent applications can consist of odors that deer find repulsive, and taste applications that make your plantings inedible. And all applications are applied by technicians that are NYS DEC licensed experts.

So if deer have been feasting on your plantings, now they'll have to find a new place to satisfy their hunger.

"You know, Professor Rice tells me that Auletta's science is amazingly accurate in describing what Einstein was thinking at the time."

"I'll put that in the article I will write about this," I said. "And we'll need some volunteers."

"So I can count you in?"

I walked Wilson back out to his car. He drives a 1991 Ford Pickup Truck and lives in Springs with his wife. The sun was setting over the boats in the harbor across the way. He got in, turned on the key, waved and pulled away, and immediately collided with a big bang with a tan Toyota Camry coming merrily down the street heading north. Pieces of both cars flew off as they came to a halt each in one of the two lanes of the street there.

Nobody was injured, except in the other car, which I walked over to. There in the passenger seat was a woman who indicated she had been wrenched in the crash by her seatbelt. There were two women, both barefoot. They spoke Vietnamese, but one did understand a little English. Wilson walked over, scratching his beard.

"I'll call 911," I said, pulling out my cellphone. And I did, ordering up the police and an ambulance, just in case.

During the next hour and a half, I stood around with Wilson as we watched this blizzard of fire trucks, police cars, paramedics and ambulances that showed up very promptly. I had been shooing the traffic onto the shoulder of the road to pass southbound on the shoulder, and Mike Green, who lives next door, appeared on the street and handled the traffic heading northbound on the opposite shoulder.

People rolled down their windows. "Everybody okay?"

I'd nod and wave them on. Then when the police arrived and took over they shut down the whole operation in both directions and turned traffic back where they had come from.

I hung around through the police report, the flashing lights, the gurney, the blankets, the neck brace and the careful placing of the injured woman in the ambulance (she was issuing a thumbs up), which scooted off. After that, the tow trucks began to arrive.

I turned to Wilson at one point. He had called his wife on the cell and she was on her way.

"America," he said.

Zagat

recall any restaurant anywhere on the East End ever scoring a 29 in all the years we have been following Zagat.

Tied for second and third at 27 points were La Plage on the beach in Wading River (northeast of Riverhead) and Dave's Grill on the docks at Montauk Harbor.

There were nine restaurants tied at 26. They were The Frisky Oyster and Noah's in Greenport, Starr Boggs in Westhampton Beach, Stone Creek in East Quogue, the Plaza Café in Southampton, Mirko's in Water Mill, The Palm in East Hampton and Harvest on Fort Pond in Montauk.

Twenty-fives were achieved by Amarelle in Calverton, The American Hotel and Tutto Il Giorno in Sag Harbor, Robert's in Water Mill, Luce + Hawkins in Jamesport, the Living Room and the 1770 House in East Hampton, and the Vine Street Café on Shelter Island. The Vine Street Café last year received a 27 and was tied for first, a shocking comedown. Perhaps somebody put in too much salt or something.

The most interesting thing about all this, even when considering this whole group between 25 and 29, is the preponderance of restaurants that come from the North Fork. The North Fork is a sleepy backwater when compared to the Hamptons. There are probably four times as many restaurants in the Hamptons and Montauk as compared to the North Fork, and yet, just look at these results.

Is food just better on the North Fork? Are there other explanations for this phenomenon? I can think of several.

One is that there are 34 vineyards and wineries on the North Fork, while there are only three in the Hamptons (and none in Montauk).Where people in the Hamptons favor going down to the ocean beach and into the sea for a refreshing swim before departing for dinner, the major activity of those on the North Fork often includes going to the wineries, sometimes several wineries in a day, and then going off to the restaurants. Quite possibly in the condition these people are in on the North Fork, they can't tell a sautéed bluefish from a hot dog. EVERYTHING tastes good. Or they think it does.

A second possible explanation is closely related to the first. Many of those going to the wineries for a slug of rose may be tourists, but those who take it seriously are the connoisseurs of food and wine. They swirl around the wine before they sniff it. They roll it around on their mouth and tongue for awhile. They are more likely to enjoy excellently prepared food. Or they are more likely to THINK they are enjoying top-rated food, since they are connoisseurs. Certainly they are more likely than the others to go to the trouble to give point ratings to Zagat. And they are in greater preponderance on the North Fork.

A third possible explanation for this is called "tell your friends to vote on Zagat for our blah-blah restaurant." Zagat has a way of blocking a person from voting twice. But they don't have a way of blocking a chain of enthusiasts who want to scoot up a friend or family member who owns a restaurant. On the North Fork where things are more rural, everybody knows everybody. On the South Fork where everybody builds hedgerows to get seclusion except for a privileged few, you don't have that. Certainly it would be pretty gauche for the Chairman of Lazard for example, to organize a write-in campaign for a restaurant.

A third explanation for the Zagat success on the North Fork could be the greater abundance of fresh produce and livestock on the North Fork than in the Hamptons and Montauk. (Fish are excluded from this theory.) Although in any case, the arrival of fresh food is just a short farm truck ride away from the back door of any restaurant, the overwhelming ruralness of the North Fork is a daily, no hourly, reminder of all the food that is Right There. Perhaps this affects things.

Finally, it could just be that chefs cooking food on the North Fork at the top level are just plain better than in the Hamptons and Montauk. In the Hamptons and Montauk, everything is hustle and bustle. The chefs can do their magic wherever they are, of course, but on the North Fork, a chef can go out back, stare across a field in the middle of the day and just think.

What if I try putting a little more paprika in that egg dish next time? He might think. Hmmm.

Then he goes in, whomps a bit of it up for himself—it's during that quiet time between lunch and dinner—and takes a taste to see if he's right.

SHARKS WERE AS SCARED AS WE WERE

By David Lion Rattiner

Well, pretty much everybody went bananas last week when it was "reported" that sharks were spotted in the ocean on the East End. The sharks were spotted flashing their fins where bathers normally would be, and people were advised not to go into the water.

Every single news report, EVERY SINGLE ONE, inaccurately portrayed these sharks as a very real danger to swimmers. Each article made it sound as if you headed out into the water, you would be eaten by these terrifying beasts. It's a real shame, because it couldn't be farther from the truth, and shame on the media for dramatizing this "event."

First of all, the "sharks" that were spotted were not dangerous or lethal in any way, in fact, the species is quite common in the Hamptons—they are called basking sharks and are also known as "sunfish."

When I was a teenager, I used to lifeguard at Main Beach in East Hampton and those were among the most pleasant summers of my life. I even wrote a musical based on those summers, and one thing that would happen nearly every one of them is that sunfish, or basking sharks, would be spotted and we would get all the people out of the water. We did not do this for the safety of the swimmers who were absolutely in no danger, except for the psychological danger of swimmers thinking that they were swimming in the water with Jaws.

When all of the swimmers got out of the water, everybody would marvel at the sunfish. They would marvel at how large they were and how lazy they appeared to be. We would then field questions, pretty much all day, explaining to swimmers that the sharks were not dangerous and there was nothing to worry about.

This was quite unlike the headlines we saw last week of "SHARKS SPOTTED, SWIMMERS ORDERED OUT OF THE WATER," which scared just about anybody that read it. People began to theorize: Is global warming causing them to be here? Is this the apocalypse? No, you idiot, they are just sunfish, and it's not a big deal.

And if the truth be told, I've gone swimming with them.

Back to my lifeguarding days. When everybody got out of the water, nearly all of the lifeguards, myself included, would take turns paddling out into the water on a surfboard to pet the sunfish.

I can remember very clearly, a lifeguard, Sean Kennedy (who at that time was sort of a legendary guy who I've heard has since joined the military) and Mica Marder (an artist who runs his own landscaping company like his father did) headed out into the sea to check out the basking sharks, and I remember watching Sean through my binoculars at the top of the lifeguard stand, literally jump on top of one of these sharks and go for a ride. The shark then went underwater, and Sean followed the shark down under by holding onto its fin. He was playing with the shark the way anybody would play with a friendly dolphin while on vacation at Seaworld.

Sean later explained to me on the beach that he went for an underwater ride with the sunfish and that it was one of the coolest things that he had ever done. We all talked about it later and we always looked forward to the days when we would see sunfish in the water because it meant that we would get a break from watching the water and could go out and check out some nature.

So, go ahead and swim your hearts out, and if there has been any confusion about these creatures, I hope this article has cleared it up.

videoconference from a courtroom in Islip, charged with six counts, including failure to maintain proper altitude and unintentional negligent destruction of a public conveyance.

Last month, five years after this disaster, which was until that time the largest air disaster in Brazilian history, a judge in Brazil dismissed all charges but one, failure to notice that their crash warning system was not activated. Then this week, the judge sentenced Lepore and Paladino to four years and four months in jail, which he then immediately commuted to four years and four months of community service, to be served according to Brazilian law but here on Long Island.

At the announcement of the sentencing, the lawyer for the pilots said they would appeal this sentence to have it thrown out. Meanwhile, the lawyer for the prosecution said he would appeal the sentence to have it be considered inadequate.

How this sentence would be served under Brazilian law is not known, but here in New York State, according to a County Clerk in Islip, a commuted sentence means seven hours of service for every day of the jail sentence not served. So, for example, a sentence of one year of community service would convert to 2,555 hours of service, an amount that could be served over 10 years so it could be served part time. In this case, it might extend through the rest of these pilots' lives, though part time. You might see them volunteering at food pantries, shelters, community centers and schools.

On the other hand, even if the sentence were upheld on appeal, it might not have to be served at all. Though extradition exists between Brazil and America for many crimes, conviction of just such a minor offense is not included. The pilots could conceivably not do community service here and only have to avoid ever returning to Brazil.

AUCTIONING A HOME FOR JAPAN RELIEF

By Elise D'Haene

Setsuo Ito spent much of his childhood just south of where the devastated Fukushima Nuclear Plants are in the Tohoku region of Japan. He was born in 1947, at a time when the Japanese were laboring to recover from the devastation of World War II. A sculptor and artist who spent 30 years in architectural corporate design in New York City, Ito came out to the East End in the early 1990s and purchased a 15-acre piece of property north of the highway in Water Mill. He would camp there, immersing himself in the surrounding forest. As a conceptual artist trained at the Tokyo University of Fine Art and influenced both by nature and modern art and architecture, Ito set out to build his dream house. The result was a futuristic 12,000-square-foot home with a symbolic pyramid observation tower on a hilltop, providing panoramic views of the Atlantic Ocean and Peconic Bay. At once serene and modern, the property includes a 5,000-square-foot sun deck, a 1,600-square-foot pool, with a waterfall and Jacuzzi; all protected by a one-acre white pine forest.

A series of events have landed Ito at perhaps the most interesting time of his life. These events, which include a longstanding love affair with the landscape of the American Southwest, his concern over many years for the welfare of Japanese culture, and his choice to leave behind a successful career in architectural design to focus full time on his art, have led Ito to make a decision—he will auction his Bridgehampton estate, called Island in the Sky, and donate 10% of the proceeds as seed money to the Japanese Rescue Fund, a foundation he has created to help the Japanese recover from the catastrophic earthquake, tsunami and Fukushima disaster. In addition to his home, he will auction a subdivided, adjacent vacant lot of 5.8 acres.

After completing "Earthscapture," a series of large sculptures inspired by the landscape of the American Southwest, Ito injured his right wrist, rendering him unable to continue sculpting in the large-scale way he had. Shortly thereafter, he was helping some workers carry materials when a piece of wood pierced through his left leg two inches and hit the knee bone.

While recovering, he turned to writing a book about Japanese culture and Japanese identity, both of which he felt were threatened by the "numbness" of the Japanese people. He wanted the book "to wake up" the culture, "to rescue Japan" from its slumber. But something else happened: Tohoku earthquake on March 11 of this year, also known as the Great East Japan Earthquake, tsunami, and nuclear disaster. It roused the nation.

"My book is no longer important," Ito said, "they've woken up." And so has Ito. A new purpose has been ignited, which led him to found the Japanese Rescue Fund and to auction his home. "After the earthquake I said to myself, just go directly to Japan and work on this." A percentage of the money raised by the auction, which will be held on June 26, and a benefit on Saturday, June 11, at his estate, will go directly to "helping to restore farming in the contaminated areas around the Fukushima plant." Ito will go there in August and he plans to meet with nuclear physicists, biologists and environmentalists to collaborate on how to "remove radioactive particles from the soil" and restore the rich agricultural life in the area.

Meanwhile, he and his wife and three small children have moved to "one of the smallest most isolated towns in Utah" called Torrey, which has a population of 170 and is at the entrance of the Capitol Reef National Park. They have downsized considerably to a 1,600-square-foot home with two bedrooms. After traveling so often to the Southwest, to a landscape that has clearly caught his attention, Ito decided it was time to stay. "We want to raise our children in nature," he said. "We love it. There is no grocery store, but there are amazing rainbow-colored rock formations."

To find out more about Island in the Sky, the Japanese Rescue Fund, and the house and land auction, you can visit JapanRescueFund.us. The benefit on Saturday, June 11, called "Japan Culture Fair," from 5 to 8:30 p.m., will give participants an opportunity to see Ito's estate. There will be traditional Japanese music and dance, a martial arts demonstration, a tea ceremony, an origami and Japanese drumming class for children, flower art, and sushi and cocktails. You can also call 537-3201. General admission is $150, children under 12 are admitted for free.

"The disaster in Japan is a wake-up call for many of us," Ito said. In fact, "I believe it is a wake-up call for all of us. We must help now."

A Beautiful Day to Run Through Potatoes

By Kim Palmer

At 8:30 a.m. on Saturday morning, hundreds of participants, along with their families and friends, waited anxiously on the lawn of Militia Park in Bridgehampton. Latecomers shuffled in for last-minute registration, children played with their toys spread across the grass, babies slept and old friends from previous years caught up with each other. They were all waiting for the "Ready, Set, Go!" call of the announcer to take place at 9 a.m., when walkers and runners would set off on the 3.1 mile course down Ocean Avenue. The event was the Dan's Papers Potatohampton Minithon, a 5K race held this year for the American Heart Association and The Southampton Animal Shelter, this year marking the 33rd anniversary of the race.

Among the enthusiastic participants was last year's winner, Richard Temerian, of Manhattan, age 52. He has been running the Potatohampton for 18 years, and last year was his first win. He runs 15 to 20 races a year, ranging from the mile to the marathon, through the racing club Urban Athletics. He has participated in the New York City Marathon the past four years and placed fifth in his age group last year. So what stands out about Potatohampton for this avid runner? "It's great to see Dan with his hat on and the convertible. It's just a great race; it's so much

"Nazi Invasion of the Hamptons" Screenplay

By Nanci E. LaGarenne

They drifted. Four would-be terrorist spies for the Germans, former inhabitants of the U.S., headed for East Hampton in a submarine (U Boat-202, The Innsbruck). They were shy of their course (East Hampton) and wound up ashore in their rubber boat on Atlantic Beach in Amagansett. The infamous Nazi saboteurs saga, known as Operation Pastorius, began way before an unarmed Coast Guard Seaman, John C. Cullen, walking his post along the dark Amagansett beach on June 13, 1942, met up with four men dressed as fishermen in the wee hours. Saboteurs George John Dasch (leader), Ernest Peter Burger, Heinrich Harm Heinck and Richard Quirin were armed with explosives; they planned to take a train to the city to wreak havoc with American civilian businesses and the railway systems. Intrigued? Know the story? Get ready for Nazi Invasion of the Hamptons – a staged reading based on a screenplay (based on actual events), by Peter Koper of Springs, Saturday, June 11 at Mulford Barn, courtesy of the East Hampton Historical Society.

Eleven actors, in a production overseen and cast by Teri Kennedy of Springs, will bring this event in our local – and the country's – history to life. The reading will benefit the refurbishing of the old Life-Saving Station and Coast Guard Station at Atlantic Beach.

Amagansett Coast Guard Station, 1911

Koper "loves stories about the East End, from Goody Garlick to mysterious aliens landing at Camp Hero." He loved the story of the Nazi saboteurs and through a grant from the Berlin-Brandenburg Film Board, he was able to bring the historic event to life (and perhaps a film in the future). He approached Richard Barons, East Hampton Historical Society's Executive Director, with his play and "he loved the idea." Ditto Dominick Stanzione, a member of the Amagansett Life Saving and Coast Guard Building Community Center Committee. Councilman Stanzione of the E.H. Town Board had coincidentally written his own play about the saboteurs, but he was enthusiastic about Koper's play and the staged reading. He didn't read it, but Hugh King did. Hugh is the curator East Hampton of Home Sweet Home Museum, our Town Crier and a member of the Committee to save the old Life Saving Station and Coast Guard Station. "It's a real Keystone Kops affair," says King.

Koper's play "goes beyond the story," he tells me.

By way of spoiler alert, the synopsis will end here, but Kennedy, who cast actors chosen locally, from New York and UpIsland says, "The story Peter wrote is both funny and poignant. It shows the tragedy of those four guys. Their naïveté and poor judgment…This play shows the little surprise of history that took place right in our town. The place it all began, the Amagansett Life Saving Station, and now the telling of the story is saving the building," she says.

So many people are passionate about this event and the old building that sits on Atlantic Avenue, the sound of the ocean nearby, the sense of history connecting the past with the present. This is not lost on Kent Miller, of the Community Boat Shop on Bluff Road and Amagansett Concerned Citizens member. He is part of the effort and the Committee to save the old building for future use (a museum, a community room, art gallery, town lifeguard base) and posterity. "June 11th is close enough to the 69th Anniversary of the Nazi Invasion at Atlantic Beach," Kent says. " One of our goals is to connect the Marine Museum on Bluff Road with the old Life Saving Station."

We walked around the old building and

Everyone Helps to Save This Farmland

By T.J. Clemente

In light of the recent Southampton Town Board decision to use Community Preservation Fund money to purchase the Foster Farm in Sagaponack (82 acres adjacent to Montauk Highway), and the recent Peconic Land Trust purchase of Pike's Farmstand in Sagaponack, I spoke to Peconic Land Trust President and friend of Dan's Papers, John v.H Halsey, for some clarity about both transactions. He took time from his Memorial Day sojourn in California to reply.

"No two acquisitions are the same," he said. "In the case of the Foster Farm, the family has offered to sell development rights on the agricultural land to the Town. They will retain ownership of the protected farmland. They are selling the rights over a period of years [I believe five years]. The benefit of this is that it doesn't tap all of the Town's available funds, but instead spreads it out, enabling the Town to do other acquisitions this year." So I asked him what was the Peconic Land Trust view of this acquisition. "We are 100% in support of this acquisition as the parcel is 80+ acres on Montauk Highway that could otherwise be developed in the future." When asked how this differs from the Pike's Farmstand deal, Halsey said, "In the case of the Pike Farmstand, the property [on which the farmstand operates and will continue to operate] was owned by the Hopping family. They were not interested in a sale of development rights, but rather the sale of the property in its entirety. Needless to say, the purchase price was well beyond the capacity of the Pikes to acquire. So the Trust entered into a contract to purchase the property from the Hopping family with the idea that we would raise private funds from the community and simultaneously sell the development rights to the Town and County. This provided us with another source of funds to purchase the property. The purchase price was $6 million of which the Trust brought $1.7 million to the table and the Town/County brought the balance through the purchase of the development rights at $4.3 million. Several months ago we then sold the restricted farmland with additional restrictions to the Pikes at a price they could afford. In both the Foster and the Pike transactions, the farmers end up owning the restricted farmland, but the path for the Pikes was more complicated because they did not own the farmland to begin with."

Next I asked Halsey about his and the Peconic Land Trust's view about how future CPF/SH dollars are going to be spent or should be spent. He replied that the Peconic Land Trust "believes that future acquisitions should use CPF funds as efficiently as possible. In other words, get the biggest bang for the buck by focusing on the remaining large parcels in the Town. We are really in the endgame in terms of land protection." He went on to explain that "the next challenge, however, is to assure that farmers have access to already protected farmland. Unfortunately, there have been a number of acquisitions of protected farmland by non-farmers over the last 5 to 10 years that have resulted in protected farmland coming out of agricultural production. The purchases have also skewed the value of protected farmland to a level that has serious implications for estate planning." Halsey continued: "These high prices make it increasingly difficult for farmers to purchase protected farmland when it becomes available, hence the importance of the Pike project as a model. Both the Trust and the town may need to acquire additional restrictions on already protected farmland in order to address this problem."

Finally, with a look towards the immediate future, what does he see in both the CPF/SH and the Peconic Land Trust pipeline? He replied, "I believe that Southampton Town is in negotiations on several other agricultural properties that may be subject to public hearings this summer. The Trust continues to work on the Weigley-Babinski farmland in Wainscott. We hope to raise private funds to supplement East Hampton Town's CPF funds to acquire the development rights on this very visible parcel on Wainscott's Main Street."

Halsey said that the Peconic Land Trust has had a hand in preserving some 10,000 acres since the Trust was formed in 1983. And there are at least 10,000 more acres it hopes to preserve.

fun," he says. Temerian came in first again this year with a time of 17:20:08, beating the second-place winner, Harry Hackett, by almost two minutes.

Hackett, 40, of Bridgehampton, has a slightly different story. This is only his second Potatohampton. He typically does around five races a year to support local charities, but with 9-month-old twins and a four-year-old, he has to squeeze in runs when he can. Hackett came in second with a time of 19:07:00. "My goal was to run 19:30:00 and it was a little faster. I held in the last mile a little better than I thought." He certainly did. About Potatohampton, he says, "It's a great race and Dan does a great job. I've wanted to run the 10K version but that disappeared, but this 5K is great. I'm really happy with it."

Hackett and Temerian may be fast, but will they still be running Potatohampton at 78 like Blaire Stauffer of Sag Harbor? He started racing competitively around age 50 and does six or more races in the area each summer. "I think Dan's may have been the first one I participated in," he says, "It was usually on Memorial Day so it opens my season. I'm looking forward to it. It's a 5K so it's shorter than some of the races out here and all these kids run like hell." In years past, Stauffer has run half and full marathons, including seven New York Marathons. Although he doesn't run in the winters, he does a warm-up before this race. "This year I did an 18-miler so I was pleased with myself," he says. He's been running Potatohampton for quite a few years. "You think of races like this becoming perpetual but after you've been around for a while you realize everything changes, so it's always interesting. I look forward to seeing friends here. You begin to run into the same people and you form these existing groups that you're not necessarily competing against, but let's face it, when you race someone, you're challenging them, whoever it is." Temerian, Hackett and Stauffer will all participate in the upcoming Shelter Island 10K on June 18.

Stauffer is not the oldest participant though. Richard Lavpot of Riverdale is, at 90 years old. He has only missed one year since the very beginning of Potatohampton, almost 40 years ago. "I was a run-of-the-mill runner. Just got to be a habit to do it every year," he says, "To me, it's nostalgia, nothing more." He remembers a time when the race was a 10K and had close to 1,000 runners at its start. From runners to walkers, young to old, everyone crossed the finish line with a smile and Dan drove the course cheering them on in his Smart Car and straw hat.

For some, the summer racing season has just begun, and for others, this will be their only race, but either way, they'll all be back for another year.

Kent explained how it was when it was the Life Saving Station. There was a wrap-around porch, a keeper's room, a kitchen, mess room, and the men's quarters faced the ocean; the large boat room in front had barn/garage type doors where the rescue boats were kept. The Tower Room has a view for miles. The Guard House, a small outbuilding sat nearby at one time, and is now on the ground of the Marine Museum, nearly dilapidated, but possibly able to be restored and returned to its former site on Atlantic Avenue, near the station.

There is a Resolution the Town Board adopted this year recognizing the historic value of the old Life Saving/Coast Guard Station. They have authorized the Committee that Kent Miller is part of to develop a plan, which is one of the reasons they are having a benefit reading of the screenplay.

USLSS # 10, Coast Guard Station #68, built in 1849, can be saved. Go see the staged reading of the Nazi Invasion of the Hamptons on Saturday, June 11, with performances at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. Tickets are available by calling 631-324-6850 or at the door at Mulford Barn, 10 James Lane East Hampton. The pre-show reception at 5:30 p.m. is sponsored by Amagansett Wines and Spirits, Amagansett Farmers Market and Stuart's Fish Market.

Who's Here

James West
Dancer, Teacher

By Judy S. Klinghoffer

Twenty-five years ago, James West got his first taste of ballroom dancing and it has been his love and his life since then.

Fresh out of the Air Force, living in Germany, West had accompanied his partner, a chef, to a party he was catering at an Arthur Murray Dance Studio. A dance instructor pulled West onto the dance floor and it was the beginning of a long love affair between West and the art of ballroom dancing.

This past May, West marked his 25th anniversary in the Arthur Murray organization, time he has spent as an instructor, judge, studio manager and supervisor, and now as the owner of the Arthur Murray School of Dance in Southampton. That's 25 years spent teaching a startling variety of people, from all kinds of occupations, backgrounds and ages. His students range in age from seven to 80 years old. What they all have in common is a desire to dance, which West has shared ever since that first dance.

West didn't start out with a vision of a life in dance. Growing up in Boston, the oldest of three kids, he recalls liking school, particularly science. "I was a real whiz kid," West laughs. He was planning a career in medicine, but that goal was pushed aside in high school when West discovered languages. His new goal was securing a job as a translator at the United Nations. "I even got the application and started to fill it out," he said.

By the time he set off for college, West was set on a double major in French and Russian, with a minor in secondary education. "I figured I could fall back on teaching languages in high school," West remarked, but once again, his plans took an unexpected turn. "Sophomoritis set in," West admits, and he decided to join the military.

In the Air Force, West landed an assignment in "electronics and over-satellite encryption." It was his job to maintain the equipment and to decode and encode "all the secrets," a perfect opportunity for West to utilize his linguistic skills. Once again, West had a new career in his sights. After his time in the military, he decided to remain in Europe, settling in Germany, but the difficulty of an American citizen working for the German government in over-satellite encryption left West with his plans up in the air.

While West debated about his next move, he went with his then partner to an Arthur Murray Studio party and that first dance reminded him of the old Arthur Murray TV show, which his mom had loved watching in reruns. She taught West how to dance. Clearly, mom had done a great job, because the studio quickly offered to train West as an instructor.

For the next 11 years, West taught ballroom dancing at various Arthur Murray studios in Germany and danced at local clubs after studio hours. When concert promoters needed dancers for shows, they would ask the local club owners for recommendations, and that was how West – former future doctor, U.N translator, high school language teacher, over-satellite encryption specialist – found himself stepping out onto the stage with the likes of Grace Jones and Eartha Kitt.

He remembers both of those experiences vividly: "Grace Jones…that was so wild! She is wilder than you would imagine! Twelve-inch stilettos! She is a tiny little thing, but she comes across so big!" He smiles remembering Eartha Kitt: "She was so gorgeous on stage, a true diva in every sense of the word."

Before leaving Europe, West continued his education, both in dance and other areas. He got a masters in social work. He studied ballroom dancing with some of the greats in Blackpool, including a coaching session with Donny Burns. For those who don't know the big names in ballroom, this is the equivalent of getting Babe Ruth to give you batting tips. When West returned to the U.S., he had yet another goal – to own his own Arthur Murray Dance Studio. After supervising and managing Arthur Murray Studios in the Boston area, in Nassau County and in Manhattan, West finally got the chance to buy the franchise in Southampton.

"I hadn't been out here before," West says, but it didn't take long for him to know that he wanted his Southampton studio to be "what the Hamptons deserves…a jewel of a studio." His overall impression of the East End is that "it's a lot more normal than you'd think!"

After 25 years in the business, West is still mad hot for ballroom. What about ballroom dancing does it for him?

"I think it enriches my life and the people I work with. It's something that anyone can do and excel in." West has even seen students transcend physical disabilities. "I taught a 16-year-old girl who was both blind and deaf. She wanted to learn how to waltz – it was amazing to me how she could feel the music – she did really well!"

Of course, some of us suffer from the disability of having two left feet. Is anyone ever totally hopeless? "Only in their own mind," West says. "It's all a matter of having a little confidence."

He's got a few words for all the dance-phobic guys out there: "If they only knew, they would be the first ones on the floor! This is the last place where men can be totally in control and tell their partner what to do! And their partner wants them to!"

Throughout his life in ballroom, West has seen how "learning to dance changes people's lives." They lose weight, gain confidence, form friendships. Some students use their dancing as stress relief from demanding jobs, or therapy for difficult times. Some just want to learn a few steps and enjoy socializing with other students. Some want to ditch their frumpy office image, swath themselves in fringe and crystals and hit the competition circuit.

What's next on West's to-do list? The perpetual student, he is "working on my next level of Dance – there's Fellow Examiner, then Doctor Examiner – then you're Len Goodman," he explains, citing the head judge on "Dancing With The Stars."

When asked which is his favorite dance, West is hard pressed: "Hustle is the first official dance I learned, but I don't think there's any dance I don't like." It is definitely an addictive hobby, and one that seems like a good fit for the Hamptons, where the art of socializing has been honed to the highest degree.

"If any place should have the most rocking parties in the world, the Hamptons is it!" West laughs.

His overall impression of the East End is that "it's a lot more normal than you'd think!"

School's Out!

Well, okay…I realize school may not be officially over just yet… But, for The Harvey Milk High students, School is Out this Saturday, June 11 from 6 p.m. to 8:30 p.m.! The Hetrick-Martin Institute will hold its 12th annual School's Out event at the East Hampton estate of Peter Wilson and Scott Sanders. Event chairs are Bobby Graham, Matthew Kelleher and Brendan Monaghan. The Host Committee includes Giorgio Armani, Andy Cohen and Robert Zimmerman. Proceeds will provide 1,500 GLBTQ young people in the tri-state area with year-round support services including hot meals and a safe environment for students to achieve a high scholarly performance. You can purchase pre-event tickets for $250 at HMI. Org or you can buy at the door for $300.

The HMI celebration will continue on Sunday night, thanks to "Schools Out" board member, Fashion Editor and Stylist to the Stars, Tim Bitici who is about to go old school on the Hamptons Club Scene. Ever since the legendary Swamp Club in Wainscott was transformed into the now defunct, Star Room the gay crowd in the Hamptons has complained over the years, "there is nowhere fun to go and just dance!" The Swamp had been a fixture out East from1977 to 2001, hosting parties that attracted famous Hamptonites including Calvin Klein, David Geffen, Sandy Gallin, and Barry Diller. Bitici is determined to put the fun back into the Hamptons nightlife and told me, "I used to love going to the Swamp "Tea Dance" on Sundays and there hasn't been anything like it since. It's time we bring back a fun party that's for everyone and not at all cheesy or pretentious." With a glimmer of hope in his eyes, Bitici is the force behind what he hopes will be a Sunday night must-attend trend, the new gay night, "Sand Sundays" at Axe Lounge in Southampton. Tim is quick to mention, "There is no gay label. Everyone is welcome! Straight ladies can expect to have a ton of fun without a stuffy vibe." This is just a fun alternative thing to do on a Sunday night." The festivities will launch at 5 p.m. DJ Karin Ward will get the party started and at 9 p.m. Chris Baker will perform his global hit "Echo" live. Bitici revealed his dream guest list this summer would include Mary Kate and Ashley Olsen, Calvin Klein and Steven

DOWN IN THE TUBE

Gwyneth Paltrow was spotted riding from Sag Harbor to East Hampton last Saturday morning. Some people thought she was on her way to the Grand Opening of the Restoration Hardware Store on Main Street in East Hampton. Others said she was off to Cyril's in Napeague, but in the crowds that day nobody was able to keep track of where she got off.

SARAH PALIN VISITS

Sarah Palin, who has been traveling around the country with her entourage visiting bowling alleys, motorcycle gang conventions, shrimp boat docks and Walmarts to be with her "people," also came out to the Hamptons last week to visit the little fishing shack she owns in Hampton Bays and sit in her rowboat to be photographed "fishing." She also visited the Hampton Subway building on Ponquogue Avenue and ate a hoagie in the cafeteria with some of the workers, then walked down to the Hampton Bays subway platform across the street to be photographed next to a subway train.

ANNUAL AUCTION

The Hamptons Subway maintenance crew, which has been collecting debris and other junk from the subway tunnels for the past year, will hold it's annual auction next Thursday at 4 p.m. in the lobby of Hampton Bays HQ. Items include an unused Kleenex box, magazines, baby bottles both full of milk and not, car keys and wedding rings. This is the third year this auction has been taking place and it's hoped that there is a bigger turnout than in the past and that more of this stuff is sold than before. Recycling is a big part of saving our planet, after all.

RIDE FREE FOR A MONTH

Straphangers can now have a microchip embedded in their heads that will allow them to go through the turnstiles without having to swipe a subway card. The procedure can be performed by any doctor in the community licensed by Hampton Subway to do the job. The cost of each trip using the chip, during the first year, is $1 instead of $2 deducted from a pre-arranged credit card. (The secretaries in your physician's office are also trained to do this.) The volunteers who tested these chips in a three-month pre-approval test (required by the Metropolitan Transit Authority) say that the chips also work on the turnstiles of the Atlanta subway system, and, surprisingly, also open certain hotel room doors and locked cars.

PIPING PLOVER PROBLEM SOLVED

As reported last week, flocks of endangered piping plover birds were repeatedly seen fluttering around in a tunnel between East Hampton and Wainscott. If they nested on the tracks, the subway would have had to shut down. Due to the creative thinking of Bobby Benton, a messenger trainee at our Hampton Bays headquarters, it was decided to temporarily remove all the vent gratings above the tunnels that sit flush in the ground throughout the Hamptons. We did and the piping plovers, bless them, flew away.

COMMISSIONER ASPINALL'S MESSAGE

I was privileged to have an invitation to meet with Sarah Palin when she was at her fishing shack in Hampton Bays last Thursday. It came at the last minute and so unfortunately, I had to leave in the middle of one of our monthly meetings with disgruntled subway passengers. When you get an invitation like this from a great woman, you do what you have to do. But when I got to her fishing shack, her rowboat was there along with all her household help, but Sarah was nowhere to be found. She'd gone off in her tour bus to meet with some unemployed blue-collar workers in a bar in Mastic Beach. She's an impulsive woman, that Sarah. She gets my vote.

Steve Levy Finally Shows His True Colors

By Dan Rattiner

There are many people who say that Steve Levy, our sitting County Executive, has encouraged a culture in the county that inhibits the ordinary human rights of immigrants here. He denies it. But two years ago, his County Police, which had reported that in the prior year there had been almost no violence against immigrants in the county, suddenly became involved in a scandal when a high school student in the Patchogue area went out at night with friends to "get" an immigrant. Later, the high school student said they had been doing this with considerable frequency without interference from the police. Indeed, that night, he "got" a man he had never met, an immigrant from Ecuador that was walking down the street, and in front of his mates, stabbed the immigrant to death for no reason whatsoever. This was a huge shock to this community.

Since that time, Levy has behaved in a more balanced way toward immigrants. However, about a month ago, it was revealed that he might have given out a county contract to a businessman in exchange for campaign contributions for his re-election. Though no charges were made against him, District Attorney Thomas Spota declared there were "serious issues with regard to fundraising and the manner in which it was conducted." Levy then declared he would not stand for re-election, and he then agreed to turn over to the DA $4 million in campaign contributions to be distributed back to those who had made them to him. He did this, some say, so the DA would not proceed against him. Indeed, the DA did drop his investigation.

Now, last Tuesday, Steve Levy put three new bills on the agenda that he wants to have become law. These are bills aimed at illegal immigrants or others without papers. These bills, if passed will have serious negative ramifications for us all, mostly because they violate our constitution and make a mockery out of what this country stands for.

The first bill is a proposal to require anybody in the county who wants to go into a store and buy a pre-paid cellphone to have with them two forms of government identification at the time of purchase. People without ID will be denied pre-paid cellphone purchases. Further, the name of the buyer and the IDs will be turned over to the County Police for entry in the Police National Database.

Rationale: Here's how we trap terrorists and sex offenders.

Who it's really against: The poor and the immigrants.

How it affects you: If you want to buy a pre-paid cellphone for your teenager, you will have your info registered with the police. And if you don't have ID you won't get a pre-paid cellphone.

Here are the other two bills, having to do with trade workers.

Any person or company who has a license to do work in the county—electricians, plumbers, contractors etc.—cannot renew their annual licenses to work in the county unless they register all the names and social security numbers of their employees with the Social Security Federal Database (used by the FBI). Fines for employing people without social security numbers will be $2,000 per occurrence.

Any person or company who gets contracts to do work for the county where the county is paying 100% of the cost must do the same. Fines for violators again will be $2,000 per occurrence.

Rationale: More ways to catch terrorists.

Who it's really against: People without proper paperwork who want to work.

How it will affect you: There will likely not be enough blue-collar workers in the county to do the available home repair work. You will find delays and high prices to get anything done. There will be real problems getting people to do all the scut work—dishwashing in restaurants, garbage sorting at the recycling centers, etc., And our taxes will go up. There will have to be a new army of bureaucrats to enter and deal with all the data this creates.

For many years, the Feds looked the other way and let all these illegal immigrants looking for work over the border. They are here. There are those who favor allowing civil rights to immigrants since we let them in—we are a country of immigrants and we care—and there are those who want to send them back to where they came from ASAP. We've been wrestling with this for a long time, hoping to find solutions to satisfy both camps. So far there has been no compromise.

In the middle of this, Steve Levy just showed his true colors.

I have an idea for another law for Steve Levy to put forward. How about this? Make it illegal for anyone to send money at the Western Union counters in the supermarkets unless they have two IDs (which info goes to the FBI). This will put a stop to immigrant workers sending money to their families back home in the old country. It might also mean you have a problem sending money to your son in college.

I don't believe our founding fathers built this country on this sort of thinking.

TWENTY SOMETHING

by David Lion Rattiner

I go to Hamptons Gym Corp. in Southampton right by the Hampton Jitney headquarters pretty much every day to workout in an endless effort to look like Arnold Schwarzenegger—wait, strike that, I can't put him up on that pedestal anymore.

Anyway, in my effort to look like He-Man, I go to the gym and do weight training. I have a group of friends there who all end up at the gym around the same time that I do, and we like to talk a little bit about different ideas on how to get bigger.

Of course, steroids are off the table, but other than that, just about every supplement known to man is discussed among this group. One guy recommends using Iso-pure protein while anther recommends Muscle Milk. The debate goes on, and it gets pretty scientific as we all try to outsmart one another with what works and what doesn't. Of course, the biggest guy in the room will never fully reveal what he does to get big and cut—I just can't give away all my secrets.

Okay, in all seriousness, one of the subjects that came up was a relatively new group of supplements, or at least new to me, which are called pre-workout supplements. These are designed to be taken right before you workout, and the makers claim they will give you energy and focus during your workouts. Terms like "focus," "intensity," "pump" and "charged" are all thrown around on the labels of such products.

One of the guys at the gym highly recommended a product called Jack3d (yes, it is spelled like that) and I thought I'd give it a try. "What's in it?" I asked my gym buddy.

"It's got a bunch of stuff that really helps you focus," he said.

That's a bit of a vague answer, I thought. But I gave it a shot. After all, it's perfectly legal stuff and is sold by the caseloads out of GNCs across the country. It's probably no different than taking a vitamin. More psychological than anything else.

I was wrong.

I'm not kidding, I took this stuff and have never experienced a bigger energy rush in my life, and I'm a pretty serious coffee drinker. I worked out for two straight hours, weight lifting, jumping rope, hitting the punching bag, and the entire time I felt incredibly good and incredibly energized. I didn't feel sore, I felt great. I felt like I wanted to stay at the gym even longer, even after I was finished with a routine. If I stopped hitting the bag, I started doing curls, when I stopped that I moved on to something else. It was crazy. I genuinely could not believe how well this product worked, and I was kind of concerned about my actual health after drinking it.

When I got home, I was still wired and figured I'd start reading a book to try and relax. I couldn't sleep most of the night and it was obvious to me at that point that I had taken too much of this supplement. I went on the Internet and looked up the side effects of Jack3d, and then learned that this stuff can tend to keep you up due to the caffeine content in it as well as other stimulants. The ingredient list includes (Arginine Alpha-Ketoglutarate, Creatine Monohydrate, Beta Alanine, Caffeine, 1,3-Dimethylamylamine (Geranium [Stem]), Schizandrol A).

I didn't recognize any of these ingredients except caffeine.

I'll be fine, I thought.

Well, about 150 pages of the book The Girl With The Dragon Tattoo later, I was still up and still feeling like I couldn't get to sleep.

Work the next day was not pleasant. But I will say, I got one hell of a workout.

GIVIN' YOU THE BUSINESS

by T.J. Clemente

Changes this Season

One new exciting facet of the approaching summer season in the Hamptons is a walk through the various hamlets to see the new businesses that have opened. Change is a huge part of the Hamptons scene, with businesses choosing to stake their piece of the American Dream on a Main Street in the Hamptons. In Southampton many new shops have opened this year, including Julia Gray Antiques, 20 Hampton Road, Southampton, described as a panorama of decorated furniture. Eighteenth-century hand-painted French commodes, English chests with Adam-style hand-painted garlands, splendid chinoiserie armoires recalling the decorative artistry of the Far East during the 1730s are just samples of their artistry. Then there is Sitara Naghavi, 60 Jobs Lane, Southampton, a sculptural jewelry and functional art boutique. Southampton Animal Shelter Thrift Shop on Jobs Lane is a newcomer. Animal lovers of all kinds went into their attics and basements, created extra closet space and opened up a thrift shop. Next is Jack Wills, 54 Jobs Lane, Southampton, a shop that aims for the "University Crowd," drawing from British history and tradition. It's fun to walk through the shop to see (in their words) a "heavy dose of the hedonistic university lifestyle." How can you not go take a peek? Next there is The Black Dog, located on 50 Jobs Lane, Southampton. Started on Martha's Vineyard, this shop features their famous traditional products, from homemade baked goods to their top-selling signature crewneck logo tee. Then there is a favorite Southampton shop, Cynthia Rowley, but this is a new Cynthia Rowley – The Shop at Capri (Hotel), located at 281 County Rd 39A, Southampton. A longtime Job's Lane favorite, Rowley has opened a new boutique that will feature the usual line of Rowley originals. Hey by the way it might be fun to check out the restoration of the Capri with its restaurant, all new this year. Please note that Besim Cukaj, owner of Besim's Fine Cigars, moved off Jobs Lane to Main Street. Breezin' Up also has moved this year to Main Street from Job's Lane, whereas Brahmin Inc. is still on Job's Lane, but next door to where they were! All in Southampton Village.

In East Hampton Village there are some exciting changes too. Restoration Hardware, 69 Main Street, opened up their first Hamptons location with great fanfare. They specialize in educating the customer about the intricacies of high-quality restoration, maintenance and creation of delicate keepsakes. It was the space that international brand Tommy Hilfiger had occupied. Now that Kelly Smith's A Little Bit of What you Fancy, a Hamptons tradition, has moved on, in its space is a newly renovated Michael Kors shop. The magic of Lacoste has come to East Hampton too. You can be in alligator heaven with their classic look. Island Company has also come into the village with their laid-back casual wear. Other shops are sprinkled around the East Coast, in Naples, Florida, Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, Palm Beach and the Cayman Islands! The Halsey McKay Gallery is getting quite a talk-up in East Hampton Village, as is Sam Edelman, the master of women's footwear. Then there is Crewcuts by J. Crew, 14 Main Street, East Hampton, with a "stylist" in house to help select the preppy classics and a whole new selection aimed at the youngest in the family. Two new "must visit" restaurants have opened up in EH: The East Hampton Grill, located on 99 North Main Street down by the EH Village Police Station where Della Femina's was; and the very new and popular vision of Hamptons power couple Colin and Venessa, Spring Close, located on 341 Pantigo Road. Spring Close is open and attracting huge crowds already, so call first. It must be noted that the very popular Almond of Bridgehampton has moved a mile or so east from its last location. It is now headquartered on the southwest corner of Main Street (Rt27) and Ocean Road in Bridgehampton.

East End Nest: Mid-Century Furnishings

By Tamara Matthews-Stephenson

Mid-Century antiques are all the rage.

Like many East End dwellers, I enjoy perusing flea markets and specialty shops for antiques and collectibles. Sometimes I like the hunt more than the actual purchase, it certainly can be exhilarating to nab something for a perceived bargain. Although I truly love antiques, it can be boring to decorate with furniture from all one time and style. The most interesting homes are ones where there is a creative mix of items from different time periods. The combination of styles allows your eye to settle in and notice everything separately, and yet they magically blend together.

Beall & Bell in Greenport

A popular style that seems to be on the tip of everyone's tongues these days is Mid-Century. To me, Mid-Century collectibles inject a modern feel into a home. I like to mingle these pieces with contemporary furniture and accessories to create a well-curated space. Because antiques are considered anything over 100 years old, Mid-Century items hailing from around the 1950s are considered collectibles. After watching reruns from a season of "Mad Men" on television, I can now visualize the unique way people lived in their homes during this time frame. Always with an interesting cocktail in hand, and often donning shift dresses and kitten heels, many women of the era seemed to perch on their furniture. Graphic patterns came into style, new and unusual color combinations were used, and the furniture has simple accouterments and clean lines. I love the bar carts on casters, faux bamboo living room sets, tall sculptural lamps and the edginess that is not usually associated with antiques. The look can feel timeless and blends well with other styles of modern furnishings as well as older American and European wares. I like to say that Mid-Century pieces are the chameleons of the collectible world because they often take on the style of what you put them alongside.

For an inspiring day of shopping, I often head to my favorite shop in Greenport called Beall & Bell. Husband and wife team Ginger and Ken work well together, successfully combining various periods and creatively stylizing vignettes throughout the expansive store. It is not your grandmother's antique shop because there are unique items and surprises around each corner. The last time I stopped in they had mounted a pair of orange painted wooden deer heads and horns over the entrance counter, which added the unexpected to something usually perceived as an "Old World" look. A favorite stop for interior designers, stylists, magazine editors and others with a creative eye, Beall & Bell offers something for everyone in the way of furnishings and accessories. The prices are fair and reasonable to boot.

The space is in a house, a former Masonic Temple on Main Street, which has exposed beams and soaring ceilings. The spacious store suits their style well, creating a perfect frame to showcase the wares. I have been frequenting the shop for years, and it is certainly worth two quick ferry rides from Sag Harbor to see what Ken and Ginger have cooking up.

Stop in on a Thursday and you may catch Ken unloading the truck with his latest auction and estate sale finds.

Our Tony Award Predictions

By Gordin & Christiano

Producer Daryl Roth, whose Broadway production of The Normal Heart has received five Tony Award nominations, is poised to take the prize for Best Revival of a Play at the 2011 Annual Tony Awards this Sunday, June 12, in New York City. Roth, an integral player in the New York theatre community, spends her summers in East Hampton. A win for her would be sweet for playwright Larry Kramer, who once lived in East Hampton, and Jayne Baron Sherman, a Normal Heart producer who maintains a home here as well. The big winner will ultimately be the new musical The Book of Mormon, but The Normal Heart, War Horse and The Scottsboro Boys are favorites from the past season, in addition to Priscilla Queen of the Desert, which was pretty much shut out with only two nominations. Here are our predictions in most of the major categories.

Best Play

War Horse – Lincoln Center's magical production of Nick Stafford's play stands far above the rest, a spellbinding testament to the power of theatre. War Horse is the theatrical event of the season.

Best Musical

The Book Of Mormon – South Park writers Trey Parker and Matt Stone have concocted a very silly and obscene musical satire with Avenue Q composer, Robert Lopez. The result is an insanely popular tale that has been embraced by many in the community and will take many awards. The Scottsboro Boys should win, a movingly rendered musical with heart and soul and a vastly superior score by John Kander and the late Fred Ebb, however, The Book of Mormon is a tidal wave.

Best Revival of a Play

The Normal Heart – Larry Kramer's autobiographical masterpiece about the early days of the AIDS epidemic is in a league of its own; memorably acted and directed by a consummate team of professionals at the top of their game. If this doesn't win, shame on the Tony voters.

Best Revival of a Musical

Anything Goes – The sparkling revival will carry the day for Sutton Foster as well.

Best Performance by a Leading Actress in a Play

Film star Frances McDormand, Good People, who just nabbed the Drama Desk Award, will and should win over Nina Arianda, Born Yesterday, probably her closest competitor.

Best Performance by a Leading Actor in a Play

One of the closest categories, but our choice would be the the Hamptons own Joe Mantello, whose searing work is the center of The Normal Heart. Bobby Cannavale, The Motherfker with the Hat, gives an emotionally potent performance as well.

Best Performance by a Leading Actress in a Musical

Sutton Foster should win easily over a scraggily field for her sultry turn in Anything Goes. She's a triple threat singing, dancing and acting at the center of the Roundabout's marvelous revival.

Best Performance by a Leading Actor in a Musical

We would love to see Tony Sheldon, Priscilla Queen of the Desert, win for his salty old queen played to understated perfection, but we suspect the inspired work Norbert Leo Butz turned in on Catch Me If You Can will carry him to his second Tony win in this category.

Best Performance by a Featured Actress in a Play

This one is a toss-up between Ellen Barkin, The Normal Heart and Elizabeth Rodriguez, The Motherfker with the Hat. Rodriguez has the more challenging role, which could win her the award.

Best Performance by a Featured Actor in a Play

John Benjamin Hickey, The Normal Heart, which we predicted in our review in Dan's Papers a few weeks ago. His transformation is harrowing.

Best Performance by a Featured Actress in a Musical

We adored Laura Benanti in Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown. She was a hysterical delight and deserves to win following her Drama Desk victory, but the tidal wave of The Book of Mormon could carry Nikki M. James to the winner's circle.

Best Performance by a Featured Actor in a Musical

John Larroquette, making his Broadway debut in How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, is the front-runner to take home the Tony.

Best Original Score

The Book of Mormon – music and lyrics by Trey Parker, Robert Lopez and Matt Stone, over the more deserving Kander and Ebb for The Scottsboro Boys.

Best Book of a Musical

The Book of Mormon – Trey Parker, Robert Lopez and Matt Stone.

Best Direction of a Play

Joel Grey and George C. Wolfe, The Normal Heart, for their detailed and heart moving helming of the stunning revival.

Best Direction of a Musical

Casey Nicholaw and Trey Parker, The Book of Mormon.

Theater critics Barry Gordin & Patrick Christiano are voting members of the Drama Desk.

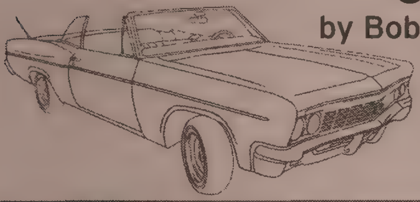
CLASSIC CARS

by Bob Gelber



In last week's article I just touched upon how cars were becoming more complicated, so this week let me continue with what I consider a mistake in current automotive thinking and design.

Take the simple steering wheel. Well, it used to be simple, although on the very early cars like the 1903 Model T Ford, the throttle and spark advance were mounted on the wheel hub. However, through most of its life, the steering wheel was just a round object that you held onto to steer the car. Now, many steering wheels have radio and cruise controls mounted on them. Quite a few high performance cars even have paddle shifters that are used as an automatic gearbox gear shifter. I've always found this feature to be rather silly and certainly difficult to get used to.

The first paddle shifters were created and designed to be used in Ferrari Formula One racing cars, among the most sophisticated in the world. If you've ever driven a racecar on a track at truly high racing speeds, perhaps you can understand why the paddle shifters make sense. With their convenient location on the steering wheel, when the wheel becomes alive with high cornering loads it's a good idea to keep both hands on it, and off a remotely-placed gear shift lever. In a streetcar, it makes no sense. Plus, I personally get great pleasure from the tactile feel of using a foot clutch and snicking the gear lever through the gears.

What have they done to the common car key? With the new German cars, you stick the whole chubby key fob-looking thing into a slot and then press a start button. Most high-line Japanese cars have a credit card-like key that stays in your possession. The car senses when you are near, the doors automatically unlock, plus the car is ready to be started with a touch of the now de rigueur starter button. As in the film, 2001: A Space Odyssey. Some day, with these devices, you're going to ask your car, "Open the pod door, Hal." and nothing will happen. Please bring back the simple car key and screw these electronics whose longevity rely on a good battery, or else. By the way, that starter button is stupid and really old fashioned. It was fazed out decades ago, my 1946 Chevy pick-up had one.

Let's make one thing clear now, cars have nothing in common with airplanes. The latest craze in aviation, that is also creeping into automobiles, is what is called a glass cockpit. Normal airplane gauges are being replaced by television screens giving flight information. Professional airplane pilots have long referred to flying as hours or boredom interrupted by moments of sheer terror. Pilots, except when taking off and landing, do have time to look at the T.V. screens in their cockpits for information, and yes, flying is much safer than driving. Today, many cars have Global Positioning System navigation as well as touch screen controls, which are the most confusing devices ever to confront drivers. When a driver has to give more attention to the action going on inside his car rather than outside, this is a guaranteed recipe for an accident. Sadly, car manufacturers have always mimicked aviation trends. It's a mistake. By the way, what do all the latest jets use as a backup for all these complicated T.V. systems in cockpits? In pilot jargon, they call them a few good old-fashioned "steam gauges."

If you can call the following a driving complication, I do appreciate the many new XM radio stations, if you can ever scope out how to tune them in on your touch screen radio. You can finally hear good talk and music radio, commercial free, and enough comedians from the United States and Canada to turn your face red for a week.

Enjoy your summer driving in the Hamptons. Just watch the road and not the dashboard.

HAMPTONS EPICURE

There are two kinds of people in this world—those who love rhubarb and those who haven't had it cooked right yet.

I helped pick the last of this season's rhubarb crop at the Foster Farm in Sagaponack on Memorial Day. Manager Paul Petrie re-acquainted me with the fine art of rhubarb pickin'.

This was a beautiful way to spend an afternoon. The Foster's Guinea hens cooed as we plucked and cut and bunched rhubarb. The sun shone overhead and no small planes touched down on the runway next to the rhubarb patch.

Rhubarb is my kind of crop, ignore it and it grows and grows. Its leaves are toxic and so form a natural weed barrier. To pick it, you pull with both hands. To prep it, you just rinse and chop.

I now have a freezer full of diced rhubarb and a batch of rhubarb jam in my basement. My rhubarb jam has a good amount of organic orange juice and zest in it. It's a great flavor combination. I'll make a batch of Strawberry-Rhubarb jam when the local U-pick strawberries come in – this weekend. Maybe I'll throw in some candied ginger....

The Foster Farm has been in the news lately. It is about to become the biggest purchase ever made by the Southampton Community Preservation Fund.

Eighty-two acres worth of development rights are being sold over the next five years. This will ensure that this, some of the richest farmland in the world, will continue to be farmed.

Marilee Foster and her brother Dean are now farming the land that their parents Clifford and Lee Foster are passing down to them.

Marilee writes a popular column about her farming life and she wrote an inspiring book in 2003, Dirt Under My Nails. Sagaponack is a magical place. We definitely need to preserve it and not just in jars.

White raspberries will be the first fruit to come into season on the Foster Farm but their farmstand on Sagg Main Street already offers eggs, kale, cucumbers, herbs, zucchini, baked goods and potted herbs and tomato plants. You can also purchase Foster's products from their table at the Sag Harbor Farmers Market on Saturday mornings.

the Brazilian air traffic controllers who were in touch with the two aircraft. One of these air traffic controllers, Sgt. Jomarcelo Fernandes dos Santos, had been the specific controller on duty and assigned to give orders to these aircraft.

Noticing on his screen that the Brazilian plane was already at 37,000 feet and on a collision course with the Americans, instead of asking the Americans to move, he simply readjusted his computer to show that the 37,000 feet for the private jet was now 36,000. After that, the records show he repeatedly failed to answer repeated radio requests from the Americans, who had seen the other aircraft as a blip on their screens and wanted to know what, if anything, they should do. Confronted with this information at trial, dos Santos claimed that when he saw the Americans at 37,000 feet, he thought he was observing a malfunction in his equipment and so re-calibrated it. He was convicted and sentenced to 14 months in jail last October for his part in this disaster and he is currently in jail doing just that.

Theatre Review: Darrell Hammond in "Tru"

By Stacy Dermont

We on the East End of Long Island are so blessed to have the Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor producing world-class live entertainment! This year we celebrate Bay Street's 20th anniversary season.

On Bay Street's stage through June 26 is Jay Presson Allen's play Tru, starring Darrell Hammond in the title role, as writer and wit Truman Capote. The show opened on Broadway in 1989, but remains fresh and fascinating. Matt McGrath directed this production, with set design by Gary Higom and lighting design by Mike Billings.

The action of Tru takes place just before Christmas, 1975. This was a pivotal time in Capote's life. Esquire Magazine had just published a chapter of his upcoming book, Answered Prayers. His many rich friends were horrified by his sharing details of their very private lives. According to Tru, he only cares that Babe Paley and Slim Keith have turned away from him. But he is clearly bereft and bemused by his shunning.

The play is witty and colorful, often lifting actual quips from Capote's life and written excerpts from his books. There are myriad hilarious moments. "Poinsettias are the Bob Goulet of Botany!" comes to mind.

Hammond takes on Truman Capote.

Is Hammond true to Tru? Yes and not so much. Hammond's impersonation of Truman Capote's physical and spoken mannerisms is excellent. He sounds like him, he moves like him, right down to the busy hands and overworked eyebrows. His timing is perfect. But not once did this critic feel like Tru was in the room. Missing was a certain depth of emotion. Hammond's Capote doesn't seem so very amused by life's parade of novelties. The real Capote toughed it out with humor and sarcasm, but at this point in his life, he was pretty low. "Desperately sober."

It's worth seeing this production to take in Hammond's impersonation within a well-crafted play, but don't expect to shed any tears or feel your heart grow. Hammond's astute impersonations worked remarkable well on the small screen as he portrayed hundreds of personalities on "Saturday Night Live" over 14 years, but live theatre is a much bigger, more demanding animal.

I was particularly taken with the details of the presentation. Andrea Lauer's costumes have me coveting Capote's slippers, overcoats and scarves. They worked well to help bring his memory alive. The set is a perfect representation of a wealthy Bohemian's New York apartment in 1975, right down to the cheesy Christmas tree ornaments. The lighting was effective, delineating different times and moods within the storyline.

Playwright Allen breaks this one-man show up into digestible parts through the use of phone conversations, pre-recorded exchanges, as well as straight-ahead monologue. This is a huge role stuck into small slippers. Bravo to Hammond for tackling it head-on. He does exhibit the quintessential theatrical attribute—fearlessness. Much of the play is Tru speaking directly to the audience, often egging them on to respond. It works.

Perhaps Hammond's performance will grow in its emotional scope over the run of this show.

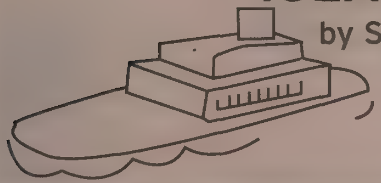
THE SHELTERED ISLANDER

by Sally Flynn



Getting in the swim of things...

I believe in learning new things all the time, and I do believe you can teach an old dog new tricks. I've never learned to swim properly, but I thought it might be a handy skill to have in case I ever get invited to a party on a docked yacht, fall overboard, and have to swim a few yards through jellyfish-infested waters—it could happen, you never know...

"Hello kids! I'm your swim instructor Bill, and I understand we have a grown up with us here today. Everybody say hello to Ms. Flynn.

Alright now, the first lesson in swimming is to learn to float. In this case, leave your arm floaties on the edge of the pool, and Ms. Flynn, you'll want to take off those water wings...you can't? Oh, they're attached, well, ah...excuse me.

Okay, everybody ready to get in the pool? What Pete? Sure, you can all cannonball in, but one at a time. Get in line. That's good.

Ms. Flynn, you don't really want to cannonball in, do you? Not to be offensive, but you are rather zaftig...the water displacement...we need to have at least three feet of water in the pool for the lesson.

Ms. Flynn, please get off the ground. It's very undignified for you to kick and scream like that just because I said you can't cannonball. You're not setting a very good example for the children.

Here, I'll let you blow the whistle to signal each child when it's their turn to go. No, no, no...stop trying to blow a tune on the whistle. Yes, I recognized it right away as "Stairway to Heaven." Very well done. Now, please watch for my signal and then you blow the whistle.

Alright, that went pretty well. If you'll please let me have the whistle back, Ms. Flynn...no, I'm the instructor, I get the whistle, I just lent it to you for that one activity.

Please don't whimper. It's just a whistle. Look, if you do well today, I'll buy you a whistle from Bliss', yes, I'll get a red one if they have it.

So, we're all in the pool now, let's practice floating. Yes, Ms. Flynn, I'm sure you can float the longest.

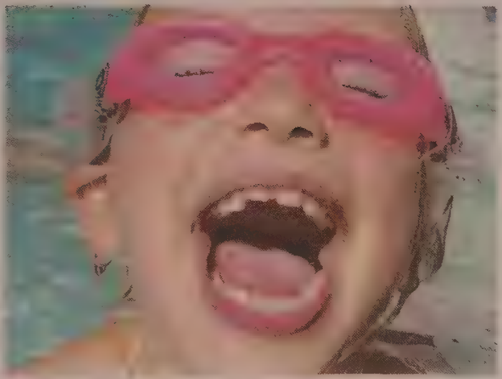
Wait a minute, you can't do that, that's cheating...I saw you Ms. Flynn....you cannot push the children under the water like that.

Alright, let's all practice our kicking skills. Everybody hold onto the edge of the pool and show me your kicks!

What Pete? No, she's not really kicking all the water out of the pool, it just seems like that. Please, Ms. Flynn, I can handle this, it's not nice for you to accuse Pete of being a drunk, he's only nine.

Now Pete, that's not nice either. You shouldn't call anyone a Walrus butt.

Ms. Flynn, what are you doing with the pool noodle? You can't whip Pete with a pool noodle! I don't care if he started it! Please, you're old enough to be my mother!



Hey! Don't hit me with the noodle! It's true, you are old enough to be my...don't throw that lawn chair!

Okay, that's it! If you can't behave, you can't stay!

No! You don't get the whistle! Now leave!"

On the other hand, I've always loved just floating in an inner tube.

A Wine Tasting Adventure

By Jacqueline Duda

Wineries and vineyards span across the North Fork in rich profusion, offering a vast variety of opportunities for a tasting adventure. With summer upon us, the search for new and exciting indoor and outdoor activities is in full swing. So what could be better than to sample a few of the wines made from grapes grown right in our backyards!

North Fork wineries offer many different experiences in terms of their tasting room events, from the different types of wines they offer to the atmosphere they each set out to achieve. Several friends and I selected four wineries for my first wine tasting experience: Peconic Bay Winery, Sherwood House Vineyard, The Lenz Winery and Vineyard 48, all of which offer tasting opportunities seven days a week.

Setting off on our great wine-tasting excursion, our first stop was The Lenz Winery, located in Peconic. It was founded in 1978 and is one of the longest-standing vineyards on the North Fork. The tasting room and the beautiful grounds offer a relaxed and comfortable vibe. Lenz employee Thomas made the experience that much better. Lenz offers 13 different kinds of wines for the public's pleasure. After going through the tasting list we agreed that the Gewurztraminer is a must-try, a white wine that is not found in abundance in many of the wineries. For all the red wine lovers out there, Merlot-Malbec is the way to go. Malbec is a grape that is becoming increasingly popular and after tasting it, it is easy to see why.

The second stop was Vineyard 48, located in Cutchogue. This vineyard was established in 1982. With their widespread selection of fruity wines and laid-back style, it was the perfect place to spend a sunny summer day with friends and family. As with Lenz, Vineyard 48 also offers 13 different types of wine with something for everyone's taste buds. The best-selling wine on the weekends is 48's NoFo peach wine, a fact that completely understandable. The peach taste was neither subtle nor over-powering. A perfect balance for the warm weather.

Next, we made our way to Peconic Bay Winery in Cutchogue. It was founded in 1979 and is the third-oldest winery on Long Island. Peconic Bay offers between 10 and 12 wines for tasting. With the beautiful tasting rooms and vineyard, as well as the friendly staff, the experience was nothing short of enjoyable. Peconic Bay staff member Jeff was more than helpful and had answers to all the questions fired his way. The 2009 Riesling was a must-try from my experience. With its fruity taste, it was fresh and light and I found it to be just what I was looking for in a white wine.

The final stop on this great journey was Sherwood House Vineyard, located in Jamesport. They offer about 12 different wines to the public. The new tasting room was opened about a year ago; originally an 1870 farmhouse it is beautiful inside and out. It is warm and welcoming, just like the staff, especially winery manager Ami. She was more than knowledgeable, not just about wine, but anything that was a need-to-know about the North Fork. My favorite from Sherwood was their summer bestseller, the white Merlot. It is a great summer wine not at all sweet or heavy. The wines at Sherwood House speak for themselves and it's easy to taste how they have achieved so many major awards.

My first wine-tasting adventure was a complete success. It's a great activity to be shared with friends, family, and whoever is looking for a special day on the North Fork.

BELLA'S PICKS

Memorial Day

Bella, everyone, and all the animals were excited for Memorial Day weekend. It was a time to reunite with friends. Whether the friends were two-, four- or even three-legged, just like some of her friends at the Southampton Animal Shelter.

What a weekend it was, Bella's first column had just been published. She was so proud to be a part of Dan's Papers, an East End legacy. She is also elated about now having a chance to share her voice with the community. Bella, although ready for the beach, opted for her early walk where she saw neighbors and reconnected with them. Afterwards, it was back to the house, into the mini-van, and off to do errands before the world shows up. Summertime is extremely precious. There are plenty of things to do. Some of those things include shopping, beach walks and swimming. Also there are lunches by the pool, kayak rides and chances to hang out with friends to share in the feasts of Long Island's local farm- stands and their treasures.

This year is more special than ever because Bella has a mission beyond her daily ocean swim. She is dedicated to the Southampton Animal Shelter and to finding homes for her friends. Last week, Bella went to the Shelter and had the opportunity to meet many cats and dogs, brothers and sisters, who need a family. They were all instant connections. It's amazing when you meet an animal. Almost impossible to say no, and how does one say no? Tough question.

What it comes down to is a relationship between animal and friend. Can we live together? Can we develop a companionship that lasts forever? How about that connection that only one knows, as you find something or someone to love.

Tigressa

Tiger

Bella has been a part of my life for 10+ years. She is the dog mother to our kids. She is a pride and joy that remains a constant companion to our whole family. She is always by her mother's side, or waiting for me to wake up to head to the beach. Bella only knows love. That is why she offers it to us each day. What a gift! She is patient, devoted and is a true woman of character, kindness as well as generosity.

Now that the summer is in full action, Bella wants everyone to enjoy each moment. Perhaps find a new friend to love at the Southampton Animal Shelter. If not, come joint us for moments of celebration. Unconditional Love on July 16 is such a moment, when we can all come together with Chuck and Ellen Scarborough. The Moon Garden

By Frederico Azevedo

It is always interesting to visit gardens that invite you to discover different ideas. The design of a moon garden, surrounded by hedges of shrubs or trees, such as California privet, Boxwoods, Holly or a very elegant tree line of Hornbeams, creates a division for a garden area that will offer a dramatic effect. Surrounded by these trees or shrubs, comes an idea of a moon garden and also the selection of focal point and accessories that will complement the whole design. Evening gardens look extremely romantic and inspiring when surrounded by hedges with a specific entrance, either by a gap between the hedges, a door or a gate in wood or iron. It will make a romantic entrance that should direct the eye directly to the garden or central focal piece such as an urn, statue or birdbath.

The concept is a garden that is attractive in daylight and magical in moonlight, filled with flowers, variegated and silver foliage, and scented plants. The use of large quantities of white flowers and variegated leaves will shine until moonlight comes into the garden. Scented flowers and pungent foliage add appeal to the gardens. The beds can be designed around the hedges or geometrically in the center of the space. Flowers such as Nicotiana, Moonflower, Petunia, Hosta, Casablanca lily, Shasta daisy and Lavender can be planted in the borders or beds giving a graceful effect of shapes and heights. Shrubs such as Tardiva hydrangea, lilac "Ellen Willmont," Deutzia or white shrub roses should be planted in the corners to give more depth to the design. Grey plants or variegated foliage will complement the design if added by the edge of beds such as variegated Ivy, Stachys, and Artemesia. White Tulips, Narcissus and Snow Drop bulbs can be planted in fall for a magnificent spring display, keeping the garden interest vibrating from early spring to fall.

The moon garden can also be located on a terrace. White flowers will reflect the light of evening long after brighter blooms fade into darkness. White furniture should complement the garden.

The terrace can be done with grey stones such as the very popular blue stone or river bottom stone for a more rustic design. White gravel can be spread between the stones. Flowers in containers will create much of the display. Geraniums, Petunias, Lobelias, Gaura, scaviola with variegated Vinca or any other cascade foliage in grey will complement the pots with these annual flowers. The planters should be situated around the patio and will look especially attractive if seated on white gravel. A large grey urn in the center of the terrace with an abundance of white flowers and variegated leaves will create the perfect focal point for the garden. Also, vines will blend into the design either attached to a wall or growing in a pergola. Climbing roses and vines such as Silver Lace vine, clematis Montana, New Dawn rose or Iceberg rose will give a spectacular amount of white flower to frame the gardens.

Kitchen on Vacation

Gabby Stephenson

By Tamara Matthews-Stephenson

It seems a funny thing to admire an appliance, but I'm fond of my stove. I love the shiny industrial chrome range, the thick flame and those chunky knobs. I even enjoy that clicking sound just before the flame ignites. Having a good quality stove makes a kitchen feel decadent. This single appliance acts as the anchor of the room, a place for guests to gather around and watch the home cook work his or her magic. Investing in a good quality range and oven can make the work seem easier, and change the space both functionally and aesthetically. It is truly a pleasure to cook on my commercial-style range and I enjoy trying out new recipes to bring my family and friends delicious food. I recently cooked a meal on a Wolf stove with a French Top, and it was daunting how many options were available with this feature. French Tops have been used in commercial kitchens for many years, and are now making their way into homes. It is not for the faint of heart and with its large flat surface with varying degrees of temperature, I cooked four pots of food at once moving them around to change the heat level as needed. It is exciting to see companies are offering the home cook more features and with smaller and easier-to-clean products. However, as soon as weather permits, my husband grabs his flame torch and mitt, heads outside during dinnertime and insists upon grilling most of our meals. Don't get me wrong, I enjoy outdoor entertaining and cooking, but I start to miss my trusty friend in summer.

Our whole kitchen starts to morph over this season. Our home starts to feel a whole lot larger as we expand out the back door, and enjoy dinners spilling over the lawn, under the pergola and more often than not, chatting in front of the grill. Now I told you I loved my stove, but most will agree food cooked on a grill takes on a whole different flavor. I envy all those people who have outdoor clear icemakers, built-in bars and an entire kitchen unit in their outdoor space. Shy of investing in a complete custom cooking system outside, there are little ways I have found to bring that indoor cozy kitchen feeling, that we enjoy all winter long, to the outdoors. I suggest using colorful Mylar trays to carry glasses and food, throw pillows on the outdoor furniture, oversized lanterns on the table and lots of accessories brought from inside. I also take console and side tables outside to allow plenty of space for setting drinks and platters of food. Of course a traveling bar cart on wheels comes in handy for cocktails.

Gone are the days of the grill as merely a place to throw hamburgers and hot dogs, because the outdoor grill offers many culinary options. Just this week I read Martha Stewart Living Magazine's ideas for cooking vegetables and herbs together in foil and parchment pouches, and of course who doesn't love Ina Garten's grilled pizza? Even rotisserie chicken on the grill tastes better. With new grill options offering steam, extra burners and grill tops, cooking outside has endless possibilities. My husband has learned creative ways to grill clams and he has honed many tricks for searing seafood. After our culinary club explored Greek cuisine this winter, I'm envisioning Chicken Souvlaki parties under the pergola with twinkling lights. Can't you picture it? All the while my lonely shiny oven will be waiting patiently inside for summer to end.

Illuminating the moon garden after dark, lighting conveys a romantic mood and expands the use of garden areas. Adequate illumination in an evening garden includes metal lanterns, hurricane lamps, pedestal candles or any soft light that would give a special accent to the natural light of the garden. Torches are also suitable in moon gardens and citronella oil should be used in them to spread a scent that will protect you from night bugs.

Moon gardens are designed to establish a particular mood with a certain kind of design and a cooler palette of color for plantings. Different kinds of designs can be applied to this concept; even a very modern concept of a meadow using silver ornamental grasses and birch trees will look remarkable. Also, there are many native plants that are appropriate for your landscape and will apply for this garden design concept.

The whole idea is to keep inspired with nature and be able to enjoy landscape with creative garden ideas.

Let Your Outdoor Entertaining Glow

By Tamara Matthews-Stephenson

For last year's Fourth of July party, overlooking the pool I hung Chinese paper lanterns over the pergola. It was a precarious job as I teetered on a ladder and tied the fishing line at various lengths. Although it can be a bit of work, creating overhead mood lighting for evening entertaining sets the tone. After securing lots of mosquito repellent, one of the most important aspects to entertaining outdoors during summer is to get the lighting just right. With the exception of a few strategically placed Tiki torches, many of us overlook outdoor lighting even though we know how important it is for our interior design. I recently came upon a few creative ideas to implement mood lighting for outdoor dining.

I like to add mood lighting at eye level and often use a long row of outdoor lanterns on the table with flickering candles inside. The overhead lighting can be a bit trickier, and it helps to have them on dimmer switches, but if you are in need of some extra sparkle I have a few ideas. After attending a picnic lunch sponsored by Kravet fabric, I became enamored with the creative lighting they chose. It was an inside event, but could easily work for an outdoor party. The picnic luncheon was served on black and white striped blankets and mint green pails filled with silverware. The flowers were white peonies in tall black matte vases. The black-and-white motif with splashes of color was made complete with an overhead umbrella wrapped with sparkling lights. The lights looked to be good old-fashioned Christmas lights and the result was shimmery lighting that illuminated the table. Other outdoor lanterns hung overhead and on the table, but the wrapped lights took center stage.

Another interesting idea is to create your very own light-up table to dine upon, just like those art tables we used to trace on in grade school. Can you imagine an entire table lit up under all that delicious food, pretty plates and glasses and of course the flower arrangements? At a recent designer show house I came upon interesting counter tops in the laundry room lit from the inside. The material was made from Corian, which has mostly gone out of style in today's kitchens because of the surging popularity of marble and stone counter tops. The Corian repurposed as a lit-up counter felt decidedly modern. This gave me a great idea for an evening under the stars – a lit table made of Corian with twinkling Christmas lights overhead wrapped around the umbrella, and all on a moonlit night in July. My new summer project is to find an ambitious craftsman willing to make me a table lit from within and just in time for summer.

Hens and Friends

By Jeanelle Myers

I've read that Sag Harbor Village is considering allowing chickens to be kept in yards that conform to various regulations. If I read correctly, the conforming yards might be allowed 3 chickens if they are confined in specified circumstances. Well, in my opinion, chickens are a delight to keep but those who choose to keep them should be careful to follow any regulations after they are passed.

If there will be only three allowed, one will need to decide the purpose they will serve: pets or dinner. It is difficult to eat one's pets, but because chickens stop laying at some point (different for each chicken) and then typically continue to live for a good while longer, it is possible, even likely, to have three great pet chickens who eat food but do not lay eggs. This would be fine for me as I do not eat chickens and would be happy to have three living in my yard.

In addition to any regulations to be followed, chickens need to be kept in an enclosed space to keep them safe from hawks, raccoons, opossums and the neighbor's dog or cat. You also may want to protect your yard and garden. Chickens make what I call "garden sculptures" wherever they can, digging for pebbles and critters to eat. These sculptures are not attractive. The pen should be fenced with strong fencing sunk into the ground at least 8" so they cannot escape under it. The fenced enclosure should be roofed with fencing.

And chickens need a house that can be cool in the summer and warm in the winter. It is a good idea to elevate the house in such a way that will not let rats and mice into the house (check plans in books recommended at the end of this article). Also, if the house is elevated, it is easier to collect the eggs and clean the house…yes, the house needs to be cleaned. The addition of bedding (I use Timothy grass…they like to nibble on it and it is good for composting) makes cleaning easy. The "enriched" bedding then goes onto the compost pile where, after breaking down, it makes the best addition to your garden or yard.

They need some shade in the hot weather. They need some good food. I buy egg layer pellets at Agway. I tried organic food at one time but it made them sick…Just not the right organic food, I think. They also get lots of scraps from my kitchen, my friend Ellen's kitchen and the garden. They love anything green from the garden–but remember that the leaves of plants in the nightshade family are not for people or chickens. Also, no raw potatoes or their skins. I also do not give my chickens white bread, maybe some good whole grain bread or cornbread without sugar. In the morning, they get a scratch of whole oats and cracked corn just as a treat.

Chickens are a great addition to one's life. They are joyous. They make wonderful sounds. They are happy to see you. It is in their nature to produce eggs without a rooster or any meddling from you. But, like the addition of any other being into one's life, their needs must be considered before they are brought into the home. The more one knows about their care before their arrival, the more successful the relationship will be.

EAST END KID

by Emily Hart Post

MY FIRST WEEKEND IN THE HAMPTONS THIS SEASON

We drove a long way to get from the city to the Ross School. It was the time to pick camp "majors" for the summer. I signed up for Nature Explorers because I love science and nature. After eating lots of cookies from the cooking class, I met my friend Gage Silver who used to go to the Chapin School and now lives in the Hamptons. I also saw my friend Johnny Cook from last summer. We went to town in Southampton and we saw a pink whale—a pink whale? Then we saw a real celebrity—Joe Biden the Vice President of the U.S.A.! We did not ask to get a picture because of his guards, but he gave me a big smile and a private wave. We then went to Kites for a Cure on the beach. I flew the kite for five minutes and spent 30 minutes untangling its string. Other than my lack of expertise, flying it was fun. I got a surprise and got to see Kung Foo Panda Two.

Yummy!

Day Two—I went to Dede's opening party at the Southampton Inn and met some new kids including Quincy Morgan and then we went to Planned Parenthood where most everyone was older than me.

My weekend is over and I need some rest!

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

ART COMMENTARY

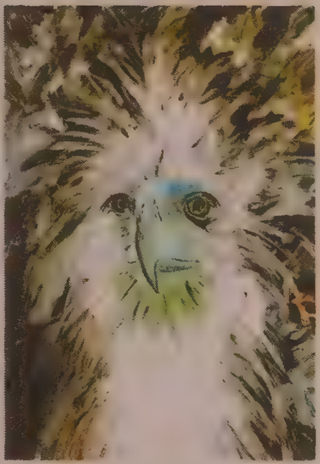
by Marion W. Weiss

Animal Paintings by Sheila Isham: Open Studio

The idea of space has many meanings and functions; it is certainly an important aesthetic element when applied to both the formal creation of art and the housing of that same art. For example, we have previously examined spatial configurations in exhibits like the current Silas Marder show. Sheila Isham's present open studio is another fascinating venue to consider space's impact on the works being displayed.

Isham has literally been around the world, from Haiti to Russia, collecting inspirations and motivations. Regardless of her diverse travels, however, her signature works celebrate nature, often exotic animals and yes, sometimes human figures, too. Simply speaking, Isham's worldview begins and ends with these subjects.

Isham's studio space complements this in-depth and lofty philosophy: it is spacious and airy, with high ceilings. While many of the works are large and need extended room, some pieces are hung too high for the viewer to touch. But that's exactly what Isham means to do. Her lioness, eagle and elephant are untouchable; we are in awe of them. No wonder they are appropriately called "Cosmic Myth." Placed on the wall in this spatial oasis, the animals appear to be watching over us.



Cosmic Myth #272 - Animals/Philippine Eagle Oil on Linen

The works featuring individual animals are recurring, but there are other paintings that contain creatures in groups. (These creatures may include animals as well as people who also appear mythical and archetypical.) Take, for example, "Dream Sequence VI," where a luscious orange palette defines the intermingling of a lion and human figure so they almost become one entity. "Dream Sequence I" gives the same effect, with green as the predominate color.

Isham describes another piece in the series as "mysterious," and there's no doubting that. This "Dream Sequence VII" particularly crosses boundaries – between what seems like spiritual characters and what seems realistic – and the symbiosis existing between the humans and animals. In this critic's mind, this piece delineates a primary theme of Isham's work. The background subject could surely be Christ or some other pure spirit, the idea being that we are all one and the same.

But Isham may not believe that this philosophy is easy to grasp. Her configurations are often defocused and ambiguous as animal images merge. ("Dream Sequence XII" is a salient example.) Background figures often seem lost among other subjects. While the art's message makes a potent case for symbiotic relationships in nature, so, too, does Isham's temporary living space where her furniture and personal objects reflect a blending with the work on the walls.

Even so, not every piece represents a balance and bond between all creatures on earth. Isham's charcoal drawings are similarly arresting, but they present another worldview. The close-up images of a lion, bull and leopard are often in profile or incomplete. Asymmetrical composition is sometimes the case. Although symmetrical, part of the leopard's face, particularly, is incomplete.

What are we to make of these images? That nature is not always perfect? We all know this to be true, but it bears repeating and Isham does it with eloquence and depth.

Sheila Isham's studio exhibit (at 56 Mariner Drive in Southampton) will be open by appointment only for the next few days. Call 631-283-6297. Her book, Sheila Isham (Palace Editions/State Russian Museum), is available at Bookhampton, or at her studio.

HONORING THE ARTIST

by Marion W. Weiss

Heinz Emil Salloch

Although this week's cover artist, Heinz Emil Salloch, passed away in 1985, curator Karen Dorothee Peters has kept his art and legacy alive. While the two never met, they had a curious connection: both individuals lived in Germany (even though Peters was born in the United States); and each had a passion for travel allowing them to pursue their personal and professional journeys through life.

In fact, it was on one such journey that Peters first met Salloch's son. As her seating partner on an airplane flight, Peters formed an immediate bond with the young man, especially when she learned that his father had emigrated from Germany in 1937 because the Nazi Party did not like that he taught art to Jewish children. Years later that bond was reconstituted, and Peters agreed to manage the artist's work. Such creations derived from varied countries where coastlines and the sea predominated, including Kiel (Germany), Cuba, Cape Cod, Nova Scotia and Long Island, especially Montauk. His final years were spent in Maryland's Chesapeake Bay town of Chestertown.

Peters, too, appreciated diverse environments when she worked as a curator for Media Arts and Culture for the Ford Foundation. But her real connection was with Salloch's art, ranging from his early 1930s subtle images with greyish lighting of boats and local Berlin settings, to his late 1950s expressionistic pieces with bolder contrasts featuring landscapes.

Q: Can you be more specific as to what drew you to Salloch's work?

A: His art is a wonderful vehicle to discover Long Island; everything he did on the East Coast was most authentic. But I also appreciate his way of looking at environment, his connection with nature; he expresses himself through nature. I like his style, too, his sense of composition, for example. By the way, there are no human beings in his work.

Q: Speaking of style, how can you explain his variety of styles?

A: He was very subtle in his German work. In Northern Europe the light is misty and grey. Having grown up in Germany, I can see why his lighting was like that. When he was studying art in Kiel, Germany, he did more expressionistic art. In his later watercolors in the United States, he is remembering the darker light in Germany; he is still using his old palette. When he came to the U.S., Abstract Expressionism was very popular, but he stuck to his own style, perhaps to cope with the discontinuation and rupture that he was experiencing in his new country.

Q: Salloch's style was apparent in a show you organized for him in New York this past April.

A: Yes. We had two 1937 works from Havana, Cuba: a fort and a lighthouse. He was using the same language as he would in his Long Island subjects, which were plein air pieces. It was his first impression of his new land; he was trying to find his new environment.

Q: He traveled up and down the coast. What made him settle in Maryland?

A: He married a German woman who was a professor in Maryland, and they moved to Chestertown.

Q: He felt at home because it's by the water, but was he also uncomfortable because he and his wife were German, and people remember World War II there? I know the residents' attitude since I am very familiar with that part of the state.

A: His wife was in academia, and that's a different atmosphere. She was extremely well-liked by her students and colleagues. Salloch was also anti-Nazi; he had to flee Germany because the Nazi Party was suspicious of teachers. He was an art teacher.

Q: What was his remaining life in Chestertown like?

A: He did drawings of the area, and while there, he traveled to New Mexico. But he fell in love with the East Coast. He was always on a journey.

Karen Peters is planning a local show of Salloch's work in the near future. Email her for details at kdpprojectspresents@gmail.com.

"Landscape Pleasures" at the Parrish

By Alexandra Andreassen

The Parrish Art Museum is holding its annual two-day horticulture event and fundraiser this weekend, entitled "Landscape Pleasures: Inside/Outside." Four celebrated interior designers will participate in this year's event. Scheduled for Saturday, June 11, and Sunday, June 12, the program will kick off with a Saturday morning symposium, from 9 a.m to 12:30 p.m., featuring talks by designers Mario Buatta, Alexa Hampton, Charlotte Moss and William Sofield. On Sunday, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., four of the most spectacular gardens in the area – all owned by interior designers – will be open to participants for self-guided tours.

The symposium will begin with a talk by interior designer Alexa Hampton, President and head designer of Mark Hampton LLC, entitled "Organic Inspirations." She will discuss how gardens and landscapes are reflected in her design approach to certain rooms. Next, William Sofield will present "Of Leaves and Landscapes – Planning for the Past" at 10 a.m. He will explore the decision-making process in constructing a garden, and how much of the landscape surrounding a building appears to be controlled. Sofield has created over 400 stores for the Gucci Group, and has also worked on projects for David Barton Gyms, and celebrities Sean "Diddy" Combs and Nathan Lane.

At 11:15 a.m. designer Charlotte Moss will present "A Garden Scrapbook...Journeys, Memories, and Revelations." During her 25-year career, Moss has designed private residences as well as collections of fabric, furniture, carpet, china, home fragrance and decorative accessories, all of which have been inspired by garden influences.

Steven Gambrel's Sag Harbor home

Internationally-renowned designer Mario Buatta will conclude the symposium with "Bringing the Outdoors In." Buatta will discuss ways to give your interiors the colors of nature's gardens and how interiors, like a garden, are constantly growing.

A book signing by all four designers will conclude the symposium on Saturday.

Participants in the Landscape Pleasures event can take self-guided garden tours on Sunday, June 12, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., rain or shine. On display will be John Barman and Kelly Graham's tranquil landscape on historic Sagg Main Street, Steven Gambrel's charming park-like grounds in Sag Harbor, Tony Ingrao and Randy Kemper's remarkable landscape in East Hampton Village, and William Sofield and Dennis Anderson's historic Gothic home and lush grounds in Southampton.

In addition, Sponsors, Patrons, and Benefactors of the event (at the $350 level and up) are also invited to attend a private cocktail party on Saturday from 6 to 8 p.m. at Redcraft, a late 19th-century, red-bricked, Arts-and-Crafts-style home on Ox Pasture Road in Southampton. Landscape architect Perry Guillot recently updated the grounds and park plantings of this four-acre property, including the elaborate walled garden that will be resplendent in early summer bloom.

The Parrish Art Museum was founded in 1897 in Southampton. It celebrates the artistic legacy of the East End and its reverberation throughout the world. Since the mid-1950s, the Parrish has grown from a small village art gallery into an important museum with a collection of more than 2,600 works of art from the 19th century to the present. In mid-2012, the Parrish will move to a new 34,500-square-foot building in Water Mill designed by internationally- acclaimed architects Herzog & de Meuron.

Tickets for Landscape Pleasures are $150 for Parrish members and $200 for non-members and include admission to both the symposium and the garden tours. To purchase tickets, or for additional information on Sponsor, Patron and Benefactor packages, call the Special Events office at 631-283-2118, ext. 42, or visit parrishart.org.

SIMPLE ART OF COOKING

by Silvia Lehrer

We buy California strawberries all year long – and in winter, strawberries from Florida – and they are all quite good. Strawberries are unique among berries. They can be cultivated in a broad range of soils and climates so they are harvested fresh, somewhere, every month of the year. Several years ago when we visited Prince Edward Island, the strawberry season hit in July.

The really good news is that these scarlet gems, considered the most perfect fruit, are currently locally grown and overflowing at farmstands and farmers markets. They are deliciously sweet and I've been gorging on them like candy, piling them into my cold cereal bowl in the morning and puréeing them into a sauce. Their sweet juice fills the mouth with the most satisfying flavors. Best of all, they are a good source of vitamin C, and eight strawberries have only 50 calories and practically zero fat.

So join the band of berry pickers at farmstands or pick them up in quart-size baskets at your local famers markets. Use local berries within a day or so of purchase as perishability is a problem. Keep them cool and dry, and do not wash any berries until ready to use. Here are a few ways to enjoy the delicious flavors of local strawberries in their fleeting season.

STRAWBERRY AND SPINACH SALAD WITH HONEY VINAIGRETTE

To toast sesame seeds place them dry in a small non-stick skillet and move pan slowly over low heat for a few minutes until seeds are lightly colored.

Serves 4 to 5

1 1/2 cups hulled and thickly sliced strawberries
1/2 pound fresh spinach leaves, washed and drained
2 tablespoons balsamic vinegar
2 tablespoons rice wine vinegar
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon honey
2 teaspoons Dijon mustard
Kosher salt and freshly ground pepper
Toasted sesame seed garnish, optional

1. Prepare the berries and the spinach leaves for the salad.
2. In a mixing bowl combine the balsamic and rice wine vinegar, honey, mustard, salt and pepper to taste and stir to mix. Can be prepared ahead.
3. Toss spinach with the dressing. Add strawberries and carefully fold into the spinach. Divide equally onto 4 to 5 plates and garnish with toasted sesame seeds.

STRAWBERRIES IN SIMPLE SYRUP

With so many strawberries hitting the East End at this time of the year, I will stew a batch to serve over pound cake, yogurt or ice cream.

For 1 1/2 pounds strawberries I yielded about 1 1/2 cups.

1 1/2 pounds fresh strawberries, hulled and rinsed
1 1/2 cups cold water
1/2 cup sugar

1. Halve the strawberries and set aside.
2. Place water and sugar in a medium-size saucepan and bring to the edge of a boil over medium-high heat, stirring to dissolve the sugar. Adjust heat to medium-low and simmer the liquid until slightly syrupy, about 10 to 12 minutes. Add the strawberries. Stir into the liquid and with cover ajar; simmer for 6 to 8 minutes. Strawberries should be tender to the touch of a spoon or fork when done. If there is a fair amount of liquid left in the pan, remove the strawberries with a slotted spoon and continue to cook the syrup until slightly thickened. Can't give you a time on this, just watch carefully (sugar burns) and stir until desired consistency. Return the strawberries to the syrup, transfer to a suitable container and refrigerate until ready to use. They'll keep!

STRAWBERRY RHUBARB CRISP

Rhubarb, with its characteristic tart flavor, is a vegetable that parades as a fruit, and is in perfect harmony with sweet ripe local strawberries.

Serves 6 to 8

For the filling
1 1/2 pounds rhubarb, trimmed and sliced (leaves

2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1/8 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4 cup all-purpose flour, sifted

For the streusel topping
1 cup walnuts, coarsely chopped.
1 cup all-purpose flour
3/4 cup light or dark brown sugar
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1 stick unsalted butter, cubed

Restaurant Review: Noah's

By Stacy Dermont

Noah

I love to spend time in Greenport. I discovered a really great place to spend that time in Noah's on Greenport's Front Street. My husband and I went there for dinner just before Memorial Day.

I liked the minimalist décor. We chose to sit at a table just inside the front all-glass wall. This is prime real estate for people watching. There is a crosswalk in front of Noah's that leads to the local post office. Plus there are hitching posts out there…but we didn't spot any horses.

The hanging ceiling lights reflected on the glass appeared as if they were hanging from the tree outside. Taking the inside out is a festive concept, but now that the warm weather is here, you have the option to sit outside, in front of Noah's, too.

The Noah of Noah's is Chef Noah Schwartz, ably assisted by Sous Chef Frank Moeller. Schwartz has cooked in Napa and Sonoma. When his parents retired to Southold 12 years ago, he started to consider a move into this "great food region." Noah's is enjoying its second successful year in Greenport, having opened in January, 2010.

The menu is modern too – it has it all and offers it up from "Tastes" to full-size entrees. Noah's has a full Raw Bar.

I started with a refreshing Greenport Ginger, a cocktail that includes Ketel One Citron Vodka and ginger beer with fresh lime. My husband enjoyed a Bulleit Smash, made with Bulleit Bourbon, muddled lemon and Canton Ginger Liqueur. Citrusy drinks are perfect to complement seafood.

I had to try a "Taste" and so went with two Crab-Stuffed Deviled Eggs. These were a harbinger of great things to come. Every element was fresh, flavorful and balanced. And the presentation was gorgeous! The natural saltiness of the crab works well with the chilled egg and the combination seems altogether decadent.

My husband started with Tuna Tartar. He decided to order Small Plates to make up his meal. He quite enjoyed eating the cake of tuna with cucumber and avocado, topped with seaweed salad. He noted that sesame oil gave it a "very Asian" flavor. Our server Claire said that many diners order two or three Small Plates plus an appetizer, dessert and drinks to make a meal. That's livin'.

I was tempted by Noah's Seafood Tower from the Raw Bar (half a lobster, six shrimp, six oysters, six clams and ceviche), but instead ordered a Long Island Clam Chowder. I wondered if this chowder would be closer to a New England or a Manhattan-style chowder. 'Turns out Long Island's version is very creamy and, with steamed, local littleneck clams, fingerling potatoes, Sofrito, fines herbs and local beets, spinach and porgy – it's very much it's own delicious animal.

My husband continued his culinary adventure with a Small Plate of Tasmanian Red Crab Tacos with cucumber, jalapeno and cilantro. Everything about them was fresh, with some heat. The small taco shells were very crispy. Next up he took on a Small Plate of Pan Roasted Madagascar Prawns. I didn't get to try any. He found them "very smoky good" with garlic, chilies, cilantro and grilled bread. Our server brought him a hot towel to clean up. Perfect.

I was tempted by a Trio of Crème Brulee (Vanilla, Lavender, Orange) for dessert but instead decided to split an Original Banana Split.

My husband ordered his standard heated Hennessy and we were off. Yup, this dessert is a classic and it has it all, including three cherries – though no nuts, which was fine with us.

Noah's hits all the right notes. Eat there and you will not be disappointed.

Noah's, 136 Front Street, Greenport, 631-477-6720.

Experience all the best food the East End has to offer, including samples from Noah's at Dan's Taste of Two Forks on July 16. Visit danstasteoftwoforks.com.

The Boys of "Rent" @ Bay Street

By Marissa Pollina

Thanks to the popular lyric, "525,600 minutes" we can try to figure out creative ways to "measure a year." RENT, the Pulitzer and Tony Award winning musical and movie, was in theaters in 2005 and the musical ended its 12 years on Broadway in 2008. The Manhattan, East Village set was perfect for the cast to portray the ins and outs of the city. Eight bohemians were forced to cope with love, life, money and A.I.D.S. Trying to cope with the epidemic, the cast grew together through the struggles while also dealing with the loss of a dear friend.

Because of the musical's' many reviews, elevated popularity and tremendous applause throughout the years, we know Adam Pascal and Anthony Rapp quite well. Bay Street Theatre, at 1 Bay Street in Sag Harbor, is proud to host these gentlemen on Monday, June 13 at 8 p.m. These cast members have been on a National Concert Tour, which previewed in San Francisco, Manhattan, Port Washington, New York, Irvine, California and even Japan. Bay Street will be the only stop for Pascal and Rapp on the East End.

Mark Cohen, Anthony Rapp's character in RENT, was a struggling Jewish filmmaker. He was also dealing with his break-up with Maureen, who left him for another woman, Joanne.

Roger Davis, Adam Pascal's character, an H.I.V. positive, ex-junkie rock musician – who happens to be Cohen's roommate – is also Mimi's love interest. All of the characters are intertwined in one way or another and they all have something to reflect on.

Before RENT, Rapp had been in many popular productions. Films such as, Dazed and Confused, A Beautiful Mind and You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown featured a few of his notable performances.

You can expect Rapp to perform well-known pop songs such as, "Losing My Religion" and original pieces from his award winning Off-Broadway show, Without You.

Pascal is offering original material as well as Broadway standards, such as "Maria" and "Not A Day Goes By," as well as classics from West Side Story and Cats.

The concert will feature solo sets, duets, RENT songs and more with a full band. An interesting aspect of the concert is story telling. The stars will look back on what it was like to work on Jonathan Larsen's Pulitzer Prize winning musical RENT.

A limited number of $125 tickets are available that include a reception with Pascal and Rapp. For tickets call 631-725-9500 or visit baystreet.org. Tickets $44-$75.

HAMPTONS SURVIVAL GUIDE FOR SOUTHERNERS

Dear Dan,

You've seen it on Entertainment Tonight and The Barefoot Contessa. You have read about it in People and Us. Now, you have the opportunity to visit the location that the glitterati (Billy Joel, Seinfeld, Nora Ephron, Alec Baldwin, Kelly Ripa and Gwyneth Paltrow, to name only a few) have selected as the weekend retreat of choice. The Hamptons has long been a second home to the charter members of the lucky sperm club, but in recent years has become the "in" vacation spot to anyone in Manhattan that feels comfortable in Madras trousers, and anyone else around the country that wants to walk in the footprint of the stars.

Since the first thing you need to do is get there, it is appropriate that the first survival technique discussed is driving etiquette in Long Island. You will probably arrive at J.F.K. or LaGuardia, where you will rent a car for your drive to the Hamptons. Within five minutes of leaving the rental car agency you will realize that the term "driving etiquette" is an oxymoron. Prior to leaving the rental car agency, ascertain that the most important accessory is functional – the horn. Driving on Long Island is not a means to get from point A to point B; it is a highly competitive sport, and without the horn you are at a total disadvantage. If you are not prepared to do 90 M.P.H. in the left lane of the Hamptons Autobahn (Route 27), move over or be run over. The cacophony behind you will be your first indication of your violation of the rules of the road. If you don't accelerate from the red light within a nanosecond of its turning green, the horn behind you will notify you. If you aren't going fast enough on a two-lane road, once again, the horn will attest to your slacker habits. While in the south it is against the law to use the horn except in cases of emergency, on Long Island it is absolutely obligatory.

Next, where will you stay? As you plan your trip, the first order of business is to locate a generous friend who owns a house on the water and is willing to give you the house, as well as the automobile he leaves there full time, gratis. Once you have done this, be aware that it would be pushing the envelope to inquire about the boat keys. If you don't have the aforementioned friend, there are numerous places to rent by the month. I saw an ad for one lovely oceanfront mansion to let for July and August for $300,000.00, but that was the exception, most of them were more expensive or had the "price on request" that you normally see only at Harry Winston. Your other alternative is the plethora of 1950s motels dotting the highway with scenic overlooks of the filling station across the road.

Once you are unpacked, the next order of business is where to eat. There is an adage in cattle ranching that in order to stay afloat financially, you must be born with either the land or the cattle. To have to purchase both is a formula for financial ruin. In the Hamptons, it is likely that you can afford to dine there or find accommodations there, but highly unlikely you can afford both. While the most casual café appears to be inexpensive, tappetizer, that second round of drinks (you are on vacation), an entrée and dessert (you only live once) can push even a luncheon check in the lowliest of places into the stratosphere. One recommendation I can make is, prior to your trip, have your wife examined by an ophthalmologist for a rare visual disorder I discovered my wife suffers from (it seems to only afflict women), known as menu myopia – the inability to focus upon anything in the right hand column of the menu. The practical effect of this disease is that foie gras and French fries appear to be the same blurry price. Following is a list of the restaurants we tried and my comments.

Scotto's Pork Store (not a restaurant but an Italian deli). Superb for takeout. An excellent selection of meats, cheeses, sauces and other prepared foods, as well as exceptional bread. Try the crusty semolina with sesame seeds.

Canal Café. Tucked away in a marina is this gem, whose printed menu offers the usual burgers etc. (the lobster roll is a must, but split it with someone – it is enormous), but whose chalkboard specials offered up everything from mussels in a red Thai chili sauce to grilled octopus. You will have the privilege of dining on this lovely fare on paper plates with plastic utensils but you won't care, because the food is so good.

Inlet Seafood Company (Montauk). This was the site of our setting the new indoor record for a luncheon tab, but there was nothing we ordered that was not of the highest caliber. The oysters were harvested that morning from Lake Montauk, visible from the restaurant, and I can say that they traveled very well.

Squiretown Grill, a casual elegant bistro in Hampton Bays that we enjoyed. Not to show my age, but the early bird special, if you want to dine before 7 p.m., was really a bargain. Good selection, good portions and good preparation.

On a general note, we found that everywhere we went the French fries were excellent, possibly because they were made from the freshest of local potatoes, but for whatever reason, don't pass them by.

For groceries, the Shop & Stop is good, but Citarella is worth a visit just to see where the Barefoot Contessa shops for prime meats and seafood.

We didn't make it to Goldberg's for bagels, but were intrigued by The Bagel Doctor down the road and were tempted to take a bagel from Goldberg's to The Bagel Doctor for a diagnosis. Just what service does a bagel doctor perform and does your HMO cover it? We will find out on our next visit and report back.

Wineries on the North Shore have the highest concentration. We visited Duckwalk to save you the trouble. We enjoyed Osprey and Wolffer Estates. As a general rule, ignore the reds – they just aren't up to par with California or Oregon, although they aren't shy about giving themselves a variety of local awards. Stick to the whites and you will be pleasantly surprised. There is good wine produced on Long Island. Wolffer had the nicest tasting room, as well as a very good champagne. There is a small tasting room on the main road, but go to the main tasting room around the corner. They also have a barn you can tour, by appointment, if you have the equestrian bug.

Hopefully this guide will help you enjoy your stay as much as we enjoyed ours.

POLICE BLOTTER

Felt Like Saying Hello??

A man in Amagansett walked into a home with his girlfriend and sort of just decided to hang out. Nothing was taken from the home, and when the owner found them there and realized that he did not know the couple, he called police. The owner of the home did not press charges, but the couple was advised that randomly walking into people's homes is, well you know, AGAINST THE LAW. The pair is lucky they weren't shot!

Shelter Island

Speaking of shooting, Old Man McGumbus, 97-year-old former World War II tank mechanic, drew the attention of police after he fired his most recent purchase, a classic Remington 12-Gauge Shotgun with pump action. McGumbus was spotted shooting watermelons at the beach with the new gun. "I was just testing out my new baby cakes," McGumbus said. "This is America! THIS IS AMERICA GOD DAMN IT!" He yelled when he was told that it was illegal to shoot his shotgun at the beach. McGumbus then fainted due to not getting enough sugar in his system due to his hypoglycemia. Having experience with McGumbus in the past, they revived him with a Snickers bar. McGumbus agreed to leave the beach, but demanded that he speak with the Mayor.

No Walking

In quite possibly the saddest law in the history of the universe, it is no longer legal to walk your dog on the beach. This has been around for a while, and it mainly has to do with the small few who are unable to clean up after their dogs (there is a special place for them in hell for creating a need for this law), and the small few people who do not like dogs on the beach and who most likely will die sad and alone. Speaking of such a person, police were called after a dog-hater saw a couple walking their dog on the beach at an illegal hour. The complainant gave a description of the couple and police told them it was illegal to walk their dog on the beach. The couple apologized and said they weren't aware of such a law.

Deer

A deer attempted to smash into a car in East Hampton. The deer decided that it was going to jump out in front of the car to disable it, and then he was going to run off and talk about it with all of his buddies. He died instead.

Bow Missing

A Montauk man reported that his hunting bow was stolen from the attic of the bar he owns. The bow has a woodland camouflage pattern and a twin cam re-curve.

You really need to read Montauk: The Bowman by Richard Prince. It is awesome.
